plaintiff. W. R. Meredith (London) for defendant. An appeal by plaintiff from the judgment of Riddell, J., of May 6, 1912. Plaintiff charges defendant with trespass on a strip of land, originally the road allowance in front lots 3 and 4, in 10th concession of East Nissouri, but claimed to have been occupied by plaintiff for more than sixty years in lieu of a forced or given road over plaintiff's lands for a like period, and plaintiff asks for a declaration that he is entitled to such land in lieu of the forced or given road without compensation across his lands as against any private person, and for an injunction and damages against defendant for his trespass. At the trial plain-tiff's action was dismissed with costs. Judgment: We see no ground for in-terfering with the judgment appealed from. The defendant was acting for the municipality, and within the scope of his instructions as pathmaster, in removing the plaintiff's fence. Upon the evidence it is clear that the road across the plaintiff's property was not laid out or opened "in lieu" or "in place" of the original concession road, but was made in addition to the concession rcad. The original road allowance was not only abandoned, but it was opened for public use. It may be observed that even north of the point of departure of the "given road," from the concession road, the plaintiff's fence encroaches upon the concession line, there admit-

LONDON, Oct. 2 .- (C.A.P.) -- Monday, the opening day of parliment, is to be devoted to a discussion of the Titanic disaster report, which will prove a dull prelude to a very exciting session.

Impartial critics prophesy that while the Liberals are justly nervous concerning the future of the party, it is unlikely that the government is in any immediate danger of defeat. The turbulent opposition means also a full and constant attendance of ministerialists.
