

greatly diminished. His mind would enjoy calmness under provocation, and self possession in the season of danger; his integrity would not desert him when its exercise was most needed; his word would not be rashly pledged nor lightly broken; he would instinctively shrink from acts of petty meanness, and yet withall he would be preserved humble at the feet of Jesus, from a daily consciousness of failure, and a deep conviction of the infinite disparity existing between his highest attainments and the perfection of the Saviour whom he loves. May the time draw near when piety shall be interwoven into the life of all the people of God, and in the striking language of the Prophet Zechariah "Holiness unto the Lord be upon the bells of the horses!"
