Assistance For The Freckled Lassie

ALL the women are studying this month on how to have their winter freckles removed. Since the commencement of the cold weather it seems these beauty pests have grown darker and darker until their fair victims are becoming thoroughly disgusted with the state of their skins and are casting around for some means of relief.

Suppose you try my mustard freckle paste if you are contemplating a crusade against your freckles. It is effective and it is not expensive. Surely such a remedy should appeal to the freckled woman's heart.

You will experience no difficulty in preparing it as it is only necessary to smooth a teaspoonful of dry mustard with lemon juice and then add a teaspoonful of sweet almond oil.

This treatment is most strenuous and is only suitable for the woman with a skin that is not easily irritated.

When you are ready to apply the paste, spread it evenly all over the face with a tiny sponge, taking care not to get any in or near the eyes.

The minute the skin begins to faintly tingle, wash off the paste with all possible speed. Deregard this injunction, and you will incur a "battered skin," which is a catastrophe I do not like to contemplate.

After this treatment, it is of the utmost importance that the face should be washed thoroughly, with quantities of lukewarm water and a mild soap, as otherwise a few grains of mustard might remain on the skin, causing a slight irritation.

Just before you go to bed rub the face over with olive oil or lanoline.

The user of this strenuous freckle treatment will find that her skin will begin to peel in a few days, but be not alarmed. This is just as it should be. When the skin is through peeling, I think you will find that your freckles are gone.

Caution! The strength of all freckle lotions should be tested on the arms before applying to the face. If you are a freckled maiden, pin this warning up near your mirror, lest you forget it.

Daily Hints For the Cook

CHOCOLATE CARAMELS.
Boil one cup of brown sugar and two cups of milk for ten minutes, add one tablespoon of flour, one-quarter of a cup of butter and one-half pound of grated chocolate. Boil twenty minutes longer, pour into buttered tins and mark in squares when cool.

PUDDING SAUCE.
One tablespoon butter, three-quarters cup sugar, two teaspoons flour, half cup boiling water. Cook till it thickens, remove from the stove and add one teaspoon of vanilla and three-quarters cup of whipped cream. Beat well together.

CARAMEL PUDDING.
Caramel 1/4 cup of sugar in the spider until a light brown, add 2 tablespoons of cold water, add 4 cups of milk and add gradually. Do not let it boil, but stir until it is all melted. Remove from stove, add 6 eggs beaten slightly, 1 teaspoon of vanilla, 1/4 teaspoon salt. Strain in a buttered dish and place in a pan of hot water. Bake about 30 minutes in quite a slow oven.

Sauce-Caramel 1 cup of sugar, add 1 cup of boiling water and stir until melted. To be kept cold.

Royal Baking Powder

MONTREAL IN PORT

The C. P. R. steamer Montreal, Captain McNeill, docked yesterday after a voyage from Havre and Antwerp which was marked by almost continuous gales. At one time the storm was so severe that it was necessary to leave to for five hours. The Montreal brought a large cargo and 200 storage passengers, twenty-eight of the latter being for the United States and the others for the Canadian west.

The Montreal, with Captain McNeill in command, was one of the four steamers which weathered the great gale in the Bay of Fundy last year. The officers of the ship are as follows: Captain McNeill, First Officer Louis, Second Officer Towers, Third Officer Sutherland, Fourth Officer Redmond, Purser Kellow and Chief Engineer Knight. All are welcome.

Some 300,000 people have left Great Britain for Australia during the present year.

THE LATE CAPTAIN PATTERSON

Yarmouth Times—Captain Patterson who with his schooner, the Elbe B. Sumner, was lost in the Bay of Fundy, during one of the recent gales, was well known in Yarmouth, having visited the port a number of times in the three-masted schooner Wandianator. Once when in that schooner and while lying at anchor in Yarmouth Sound riding out a terrific gale, she dragged and narrowly escaped striking on the Hen and Chickens, capsizing reaching her in time to save her. Another time, in the gale in which the steamer Portland was lost, he had his family and household effects on a large wood boat called the Water Lily. It was moving from one town up the bay to take up his residence in another when the gale caught her, carrying her helplessly before it out of the bay.

Some days after Mr. Deane, keeper of Yarmouth Light, sighted the vessel some distance off shore in a helpless condition and sent word to Yarmouth. Tugs were dispatched to her assistance and she was towed here and docked at Law's wharf. The craft attracted a great deal of attention as her sails were hoisted to ribbons and she was otherwise in a demoralized condition.

Captain Patterson received the congratulations of his many friends for the way he had brought the vessel through that fearful gale and navigated her in her helpless condition. He called in the counting trade for many years and won the admiration of all who had dealings with him and was held in the highest esteem by his employers.

DRUNKEN GENIUS HAS HAD HIS DAY

Even in Politics Intoxication No Longer Tolerated—Public Opinion Did It

(American Paper.)

One efficient spellbinder in the recent campaign, whose face and language were heard, came wearily into the drinking part of a big hotel and was boisterously invited by a group of men to take something. He sagged in his soft chair and thought deeply. Then he said he would take a glass of something.

"And say," he called to the waiter, "just put a dash of sleep in it. That's as far as I dare go in those regenerate days."

There were some who remarked that the spellbinder had had his day.

"The days when a man's ability could be gauged by the amount of rum he could consume have passed," he said. "In the bad old days a man was in danger of being considered delirious to his party if he kept sober throughout a campaign. But now a drinking man has no show."

"Then the spellbinder made a little speech about the faculty of the work of prohibitionists. He declared that no man could hope to be prosperous or respected if he made it a habit to get drunk. He said he knew a hundred business men who would not have an employee who drank, for the reason that drink breeds carelessness, unreliability and sloth."

"In this campaign," said the spellbinder, "I was one of three who were tried throughout this state to address crowds in behalf of a candidate who was of the party. We talked to men who were on the city pay roll or who hoped to be. There were nooses enough, but I could plainly see that we might as well have remained away for all the good we did our work and thought deeply. Then he replied that he made it part of his business to know something about the character of the leaders of the districts or the counties who were responsible for getting up the meetings.

"I was curious to test the strength of the statement and I carefully studied the men who sat in the hall. The candidate was right. We talked to men who were on the city pay roll or who hoped to be. There were nooses enough, but I could plainly see that we might as well have remained away for all the good we did our work and thought deeply. Then he replied that he made it part of his business to know something about the character of the leaders of the districts or the counties who were responsible for getting up the meetings.

"That was a story of drinking men. I learned that the political leaders who were known to be heavy drinkers were failures as leaders of men. In the districts where the candidate said our meetings would be held, we were told that the leaders of these sections were what are called 'rummies.' There were bad leaders. They ruled by the power of the place they held. They were not respected and decent men and women would not attend a meeting where such men as these would play a prominent part. The subject interested me so that I made a point of getting as much information about it as I could. I have not talked with one man who did not cordially agree with me that the day of the heavy drinker is over. He has no longer any place in any decent calling.

"The prohibitionists haven't profited upon with contempt. Very few bartenders drink. It is usually because they know that a sad spectacle a drunken man is, and I wish I could efface the recollection of the many times that I found it difficult to stand straight and heard to meet a decent man or woman whom I knew."

"The men who sat with the spellbinder smiled at him. One of them wanted to know if he saw any drunken men in the room. He glanced about and carefully studied several men who stood at the bar. But they were all sober.

This is the Big Christmas Shopping Day For Men and Boys

By J. R. HAMILTON
Former Advertising Manager Danamaker's, Philadelphia

THIS week you will get what you want. Next week you will get what is left. After that you'll get left.

As it is, the only reason you are not late already is because this season is late. If we had had a month of cold weather as is usual by this time, you would already be dotting the landscape with odd sizes and misfits.

But because autumn did have the bad taste this year to linger longer than propriety would warrant in the lap of Winter, you will find your best buying opportunity now.

You will find stocks high and prices low. You will find every merchant eager to sell, and you will also find that he has already made concessions as to price.

You need not be afraid of buying useful things this year because Christmas has become a useful as well as an ornamental holiday, and the more useful your gifts the more grateful the recipient will be.

We have come to the time when a man would rather have one complete and entire pair of pants than six knitted mufflers; when he would rather see a good warm Overcoat hanging from the Christmas tree than a box full of hand embroidered suspenders littering up the bureau drawers.

Even the children have caught this spirit of useful gifts, with the result that the average boy is far happier with gifts of mechanical toys, of fine new clothes, and of all the many other things of intrinsic worth than ever we used to be with our orchestra of tin horns.

The advertising in this paper today reflects the spirit of the stores, and the stores with their merchandise reflect the spirit of the people.

The best stores are giving you through their advertising what you want and they have discovered exactly what you want by the things you have been asking for during the past few years.

Christmas and Winter merchandise are going hand in hand today. This should be the biggest Christmas shopping day for men and boys, because it is virtually the last day when stores will have full stocks.

So go over your advertising now. Pick out the merchandise and the values that appeal to you most. Make up your Winter and Christmas shopping list from this advertising, and go into these stores now, while your buying opportunity is at its best.

Right now is the time to make Christmas a happy event.
