CHRIST AND HIM CRUCIFIED. I may not pierce the awful gloom That weils the great Creator's face ; Nor see the cause of all the woe That overhangs our ruined race ;

But this one thing I plainly see That Jesus Christ has died for me. Nor how the Tempter wronght of yore Our common father's crime and fall ; Nor how the wrath that fell on one Should burst in fury over all; Yet this one thing I plainly see That Jesus Christhas died for me.

In vain I seek to comprehend Free will, and everlasting fate, The viewless mysteries of the past, The darkness of the future state;

But this one thing I plainly see That Jesus Christ has died for me. MELCHIOR.

THE MISSIONARY'S SON. BY X.

CHAPTER XI. CONTINUED. The second and third years of Willie's College life were eventful ones in his history. The new associates with whom he had become connected insensibly acquired a strong influence over him. Clever, amiable, well informed ; he was fascinated by their brilliant qualities, and fistered by their friendship. Other aims and hopes began to enter into his mind. These young men were rich, high spirited, and ambitious ; they all looked upon the world before them as a place where each would make for humself a bril-liant career in the profession which he might choose. One would be a lawyer, another a doctor, a third would be an artist, a fourth would engage in politics. As to Willie's prospect of being a Christian minister, they felt for it a mild contempt which they took no pains to conceal.

These young men were all fine scholars, and laborious students. They also prided themselves on the extent of their acquaintaace with litera-ture and correctness of their taste. The standard of excellence which they set before them was intellectual, not religious. Their future plans were never made with reference to any other life than this. It would have been strange indeed if Willie had escaped being affected by the character of his friends.

He could not give up going to the religiou neetings which were held in the College, because this would have appeared inconsistent in him ; nor could he give up his Bible altogether, for his conscience was as yet too strong, yet under these new influences his enjoyment of the one had ceased, and his love for the other had grown cold. He went to the meetings as seldom as he could, and read the Bible as little as he dared. Among his friends however, shame prevented him from confessing any change in his sen-timent; and whenever religious subjects happened to be introduced, he always stood up for truth, as earnestly as though religion had lost none of its value to him. The change in his feelings was gradual and imperceptible, but at the end of two years his retrograde progress had become very great. All this time he concealed his feelings with jealous care from those who would be most pained at witnessing them. In his letters to his mother he was careful never to omit the subject of religion, and even after he had felt that he had almost ceased to be

I hold that a sin implies someshould it be ? I hold that a sin implies some-thing that is injurious to our fellow men; lying, stealing, murdering and other such things are sins. But how can we sin by refusing to wor-ship God. Our neglect does not affect Him, aay more than our worship can gratify Him. I believe that it is a matter of no moment to the Supreme Being whether we worship Him or not."
"Such a belief goes against reeson as well as 's gout a belief goes against reeson as well as his power shows that we owe him obligations that we can ever repay. You must acknowledge that it is our duty to love and to worship a Be-ing to whom we owe everything."

"God bimself says, the wicked shall be turned into Hell, and all the nations that forget God." Upon this Silby looked with a strange expression at Willie. "I believe," said he, "we are talking like natural beings, are we not?" "Of course-have I talked otherwise?" "What do you mean by what you said the wicked being turned into hell?" "That is the doctrine of the Bible." "Well, and what then? The literature of the lary, or for influence, or fame." "Ministers are supposed to be exalted by on Him may not perish, but have everlasting life." "I did not ask you for a quotation from the "What other motives can there be ?" "The desire of doing good." "The Bible teaches it," said Willie. "To teach men to worship God and serve "I am aware of that." "Whatever it may be I must receive it," said " Oh, men will do that very well without Willie, " and believe it-if I believe the Bible." "Then you will have to give up the Bible,"said Silby, as he turned to go out. "Never !" cried Willie. "I will not trouble you any more," said Silby ther till the end of time to offer up worship and prayer and praise to the Creator. Whatever be their religion they will do this.  "My dear friend, I say if a person feels these obligations by all means let him pay them. He may pray and worship as much as he pleases. But I say that it is not an to neglect them. For my part I feel no obligations of the sort. I owe duties to myself, to my relatives and friends, and to society. These shall be my care."

 "And to you owe none to God?"
 "None that I am aware o? —said Silby cool-ly.

His Aunt however could learn of Willie's feelings from other sources than letters. On each of his visits to her during his successive vacations, she could not help noticing the change that had taken place in him. Prayer and the Bible could not be neglected in secret without producing an outward eff. ct.
