 Pure
 delicious and wholesome

Anne Sunday morning he made a touching reference to his life and death in these terms. "The generations of men appear and pass away like the foliage of each successive year. Their bodies grow feeble and fall and moulder into clay, buried beneath the earth which is trodden by their successors. One by one those whom we have known pass from our sight, and their place among us knoweth them no more. Only yesterday afternoon I knelt by the deathbed of one who has for many years occupied a position of much honor and prominence in our community. During a long life of 87 years Mr. Fenety had ever maintained a high moral standard, both in his public and private relations, which won for him the sincere esteem and confidence of his fellow citizens. A devoted husband and father, making home the centre of his interests, his public spirit led him also to take an active, prominent and useful part in every movement likely to promote the welfare of our city. Its beauty was his especial pride, and he did much and gave much towards its enhancement. A devout and consistent member of the Church of England, the church of his fathers as well as the church of his convictions, he was constant in his attendance upon her ministrations and generous in his support of her services and in the promotion of her undertakings. It gives me much pleasure to remember that he had a special love for this our Parish Church and for its services, and often came to worship with us here even after the increasing infirmities of age had begun to make so long a walk difficult and wearisome.

The body grew frail and feeble under the stress of years, but the mind retained its activity and the will its strength even to the last, and so, I rejoice to know, did the calm, reasonable faith which many sorrows and bereavements had tested and only made the firmer. And so his death was like a gentle, peaceful falling into sleep. The worn out frame was like the faded leaf which drops from the tree at the approach of winter, but the immortal part remained, upheld by the Tree of Life, as the germs and buds of fresh leaves remain to greet the sunshine of the coming springtime.

Sketch of Geo. E. Fenety's Life.
 The following sketch of the life of Geo. E. Fenety appeared in the Canadian Biographical Dictionary in 1881 and was published with some additions in Progress in 1888.

George E. Fenety, Queen's Printer of the province of New Brunswick, was born in Halifax, N. S.; he is the fourth son of William Fenety, of Halifax, an architect and draughtsman, who was for some years engaged in the King's Works; he died in 1826; his mother, Mary Hall, went to Nova Scotia in 1783 with her father, Richard Hall, a staunch loyalist, one of the sturdy band who settled in Shelburne, a town which at one time contained a population of 12,000, chiefly made up of loyalists from the States of Massachusetts, New York, and New Jersey. At the age of seventeen, Fenety entered the office of the Nova Scotian, the champion paper of the Liberals, owned by the Honorable Joseph Howe; and during his connection with that paper, which lasted for several years, he travelled over the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, collecting accounts. He continued to enjoy the esteem and confidence of Mr. Howe until his death, which occurred during his administration as Lieutenant-Governor of his native province in 1875. In November, 1835, the year of the cholera, Mr. Fenety left Halifax and went to New York, where he resided for twelve months. At the end of that time he was attached to the Planter's Advocate, as assistant editor, a periodical published at Donaldville, a town situated about sixty-five miles above New Orleans, on the Mississippi; and in six months after became proprietor. The climate, which annually fosters yellow fever, came nigh proving fatal to his northern constitution, too accustomed to frosts and snow, and compelled him in 1839 to sell out, and once more turn his face homeward; he settled in St. John, full of enterprise, hope, industry, and a courage to face difficulties which no obstacle could daunt; he soon after started the first penny paper in the Maritime Provinces, (perhaps British America), called the Morning News the pioneer of all the present dailies. The idea of issuing a penny paper at so small a price was met at first with indifference, especially by the weekly journals, of which there were five at that time; but, in spite of all

One of the prettiest of the autumn weddings was that of Miss Emma Hopper daughter of the late Rev. Dr. Hopper, and Mr. Frederick L. Tuley which took place Tuesday afternoon at the residence of the bride's sister Mrs. H. E. Mott, General street. Rev. G. O. Gates performed the marriage ceremony which was witnessed by the immediate relatives only of the contracting parties.

The bride, who is a very pretty and charming young lady, wore a travelling gown of fawn cloth trimmed with white velvet and cream satin, and wore a most becoming hat of dahlia velvet.

Mr. Mott's handsome residence was beautifully decorated, the parlors being bright with pink and white flowers and smilax and the hall with artistic arrangements in yellow and white flowers.

After the ceremony a luncheon was served and later Mr. and Mrs. Tuley left on a trip to the United States. The presents received by the bride were numerous and the thought and taste displayed in their selection was evidence of the high esteem in which she is held by her friends.

Speaking of weddings recalls a magnificent trousseau just completed in this city for a November bride—a slender, wily little brunette, of acknowledged beauty, with a bright, pleasant, tinted with warm, rich coloring. The little bride-elect's home is not in this city but she is well known here, and for several weeks now she has been in town selecting a trousseau which excited the deepest admiration of those who were privileged for a peep at it after it was finished. It was a case where a few hundred dollars more or less did not count, as her father's means would warrant any reasonable expenditure, and she had carte blanche in the matter. Under the most delightful circumstances and with good taste to aid, it is a wonder the result was so charming.

It is not possible to give the trousseau in detail but a description of some of the handsome rows will, I am sure, be of deep interest to the fair readers of this department.

First in importance, of course, comes the wedding gown of heavy ivory brocade satin, lined throughout with the richest white tulle. The bodice was elaborately trimmed with duchesse lace and heavy pearl trimmings; it was cut the least bit low, and the front down to the waist was of shirred chiffon. The revers of white satin were almost covered with pearl trimming in a dainty leaf and flower pattern and the gimpes were of white accordion plaited chiffon thickly stung with pearls. The waist was finished with a folded belt and a large bow. The skirt had a four and a half yard train on the inside (which was four narrow tails on the outside) on either side of the front breadth there was an opening at the bottom extending about to the knee and in this was inserted heavily plaited chiffon with a deep finished edge. With it will be worn a veil and real orange blossoms.

Perhaps the daintiest of the several reception gowns was a pale green and white of some soft shimmering silk material that might be called either a grenadine or a gauze; it was a lovely thing however and was profusely trimmed with Renais sance lace and chiffon. The bodice had quantities of the lace, and a shirred yoke of pink chiffon; narrow ruffles of white chiffon were edged with narrow black velvet ribbon. The two tails on the overskirt were also edged with ribbon and chiffon; several medalion buckles set with small brilliants were used on the waist.

One of the loveliest evening gowns was of pale blue shade of satin that is almost indescribable in its delicate silvery-like loveliness. The scallops of the overskirt were trimmed with three ruffles of the satin gathered through the middle, and the bodice was arranged with white duchesse lace, blue chiffon and pearls. The narrow shoulder straps were covered with pearls, and ruffled chiffon fell about half way to the elbow.

The "appearing out" gown is of dove gray covert cloth, the waist having a tucked yoke of rose silk shot with white, with which the dress was lined throughout; the front of the yoke which extended clear down the front had at the top three short rows of black velvet ribbon, perhaps an inch wide, finished with loops and steel buckles. A great deal of chiffon lace and tulle was also used on the waist, and the skirt which has a triple effect around the front is also trimmed with chiffon and rows of stitching. In this the little bride-elect is entrancing, the delicate shades of the waist trimmings being especially becoming to her gypsy like beauty. Another gown for ordinary wear is of navy blue cloth with a white tucked full front, and bands of orange velvet.

The travelling dress is of dark blue broadcloth, the coat and double skirt lined with corse silk and trimmed with rows of stitching. The waist is of dark blue silk tucked almost all over and has a white satin front; the blue revers coming to the waist are trimmed with corse rows of very small gold tulle. With this gown will be worn a black gold tulle. With this gown will be worn a black gold tulle. With this gown will be worn a black gold tulle.

The death of Mr. Geo. E. Fenety on Saturday afternoon, after a short illness, removes one of our best known and most respected citizens. Mr. Fenety always exhibited more than ordinary interest in the advancement of the city and his many benefactions will long stand as memorial to his kindly disposition, and the adornments to his artistic taste. Such generosity and public spiritedness as Mr. Fenety exhibited is rare, and will be much missed. The funeral took place yesterday afternoon from the Cathedral and was very largely attended.
