The use of exaggeration, the profession of great friendship where little exists, and the resorting to deceiful and devious devices may be preached against the course of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, as described by himself, affording the necessary example of a bad ending to such evil doing.

Petty pilfering, neglect of duty, and breeches of trust might be inveighed against, the degraded position of the St. John Common Council in popular estimation affording the necessary warning. Other equally good subjects, both imely and appropriate, will occur to the cloth if they allow their minds to run in this channel, and there can be no doubt about the good that would follow this kind of preaching. The preacher should make it his business to know what meanness or dishonesty is practiced by members of his flock, and the fallacious reasoning by which they delude themselves as to the true character of their practices, and then make it his business. practices, and then make it his business to open the eyes of his hearers so that they can see within.
