Book Reviews

A JOURNEY TO THE NORTHERN OCEAN, by Samuel Hearne, edited by Richard Glover. The Macmillan Company of Canada Limited, Toronto. Illustrated. Indexed. Pp. 301. $6.50.

At the tender age of 12, Samuel Hearne joined the Royal Navy—his widowed mother regretfully consenting due to his failure in school—and went to war. This was in 1757, the second year of the Seven Years War. Eighteen when this affair ended, it is not surprising then that the youth gained immunity to hardships which befell him in later years during his explorations of the North.

His Journey, which has been described as a classic of the literature of exploration, has been unavailable for some years and much sought-after. The work has not been adequately assessed since 1911 when J. B. Tyrrell edited it for publication of an edition limited to the Champlain Society of Toronto. The present edition, a Pioneer Book, is edited and contains a brilliantly written introduction by Richard Glover, Professor of History at the University of Manitoba, and shows Hearne in the light of the most recent researches.

This is the complete text as written by Hearne, and consists not only of the Journey, but his Dedication, Preface and Introduction and his own manuscript map as an endpaper. The final chapter is a remarkable account of the animals, sea life, water-fowl, birds and vegetation, and the work throughout records the various aspects of Indian manners and customs.

Hearne joined the Hudson's Bay Company in 1766, serving on the fleet that sailed from Churchill in the Summers for the purposes of whaling or trading on the western coast of the Hudson Bay. In 1769, at the orders of Moses Norton, Governor of Prince of Wales' Fort, and Hearne's immediate superior, he began the first of his famous journeys to the Coppermine River.

There have been criticisms of Hearne's Journals, but as he himself says, "my ideas and ambition extended no farther than to give my employers such an account of my proceedings as might be satisfactory to them, and answer the purpose which they had in view, . . . But as the case has turned out otherwise, (the Journals were made
