

IV

Oh ! might this season exquisite,
But linger on and on,
These innocent, young budding days
That Nature smiles upon.

V

But summer has her place to fill,
And thus, alas ! so soon,
The radiant mornings of the May,
Slip into pensive June.

