THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

1, 1897, aggregate 143,671 tons.

The public schools of the city are in a most healthy condition. At present the number of pupils in attendance is 433. A year since the attendance was only 250. The increase in a year is, therefore, almost double. This reveals that the population of the city is increasing and that more families are making their permanent residence here. There is another potent reason, too, for the increase in the attendance at the public schools. Last year most of the school rooms were located in hired quarters that were not well suited to the requirements of the the ventilation, heating facilities and the surroundings were not what they should be, and either patronized private schools or sent their children out of town to schoolrooms. Indeed, in this respect they are as well provided as in cities of a metropolitan character. The number of teachers has been in creased from five to nine, and with the augmenting of the number of instructor to the benefit of the scholars. In short, the schools have been so much improved in every respect that most of the parents see that there is no further necessity for sending their children to private places of instruction either in or out of the city, and are enrolling them in the public schools. A few, however, are still doubtful and are sending their children elsewhere than to the public schools for instruction, and they are requested by the school board to come and examine the public school facilities and so, by personal inspection, satisfy themselves that they are first class in every respect. Indeed, one only has to visit the fine school buildings and see the splendid the principal, has gathered around him to be fully satisfied that they are first class in every respect. The public schools are indeed a credit to the city of even the most fastidious in the way of instruction and accommodation.

The first attention of the defendant's solicitor, trained in the intricacies of the law, is to search ablest counsel to be had.

The outcome of the whole system is that in too many cases offender escape scott free, when, if the police department has been afforded legal advice early in the proceedings, the opposite result would have been reached. Looking at the matter from another standpoint, the need of a deputy crown prosecutor in every town of importance is felt equally keenly. In too many cases criminal actions are commenced by private citizens for motives of petty spite and malice. They lay informations and the police, not knowing the legal status of the case, commence actions when there is but little likelihood that a conviction will result. Were a deputy prosecutor at hand, he would understand proper one, and if he were convinced of connected by railway systems and have looking well and that the present enerits impropriety he could see that the
