NOTICE The complete aimlessness of so much of the murders becomes evident in the evidence. "We were ordered to shoot the women," says one Westphalian prisoner. "When the mother was dead, the major gave the order to shoot the child, so that the child should not be left alone in the world," which was accordingly done. Some are quite scandalized at the looting, others at the drunkenness; others more religious believe that all these things will bring down upon them the wrath of God. "At Leffe nineteen civilians shot. Women begging for mercy as we marched to war," writes one diary. "Dinner about a hundred men or more were huddled together and shot. A horrible Sunday. "We arrive at the village of Batten. The whole village will be a women's children and old men stand at the end of the village weeping and holding up their hands. A dreadful moment for me, and my eyes fill up with tears."

GERMAN VIOLATION OF LAWS OF WAR

"Germany's Violation of the Laws of War, 1914-15," is the English title of the official volume issued by the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs. The most important part of this work (says the London Nation) is the issues in facsimile and translation on opposite pages, German prisoners, prisoners or dead on the field of battle, whose authenticity it is impossible to question. Some such text-monolets have already been published in pamphlets and otherwise; this book provides a further supply. It is mainly interesting as revealing how some officers and men were regarding this orgy of bloodshed and infamy. The troops are undisciplined. Desire for blood and lust and booty are the dominant passions. The army is reeling and swinging onward through Belgium in these hot August days, pushed forward by the multitudes behind, accompanied in its march by a pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night, the light and the smoke of burning villages and towns. It is accompanied also by continual manifestations of terrorism implicitly obeyed. Firing has been proceeding from that town—it must be burned to the ground. Resistance has arisen in another village from which hostages have been taken—those hostages must be immediately shot. There is rumor of a woman—let us call her Ann—who has been taken in the store of loot, the honor of women, and even of children, be given up to the tender mercies of the soldiery.

One gains sometimes the general impression of a race like the Martians descending upon a humanity incapable of resistance and simply wiping it out without anger and without flames. Sometimes the men are chained in a system clearly established, a rational Terror, by which opponents are scientifically and deliberately reduced to non-resistance. The masses of men stumbling along the high roads, dusty, thirsty, maddened by the heat and the actual and visible realities of war, and with blood on their faces, are being destroyed by old men and women and children and the edifices which have been raised through centuries by the kindly labor of man. The invasion is surely reckless, the days to come, as one of the worst nightmare dreams of the human race.

The complete aimlessness of so much of the murders becomes evident in the evidence. "We were ordered to shoot the women," says one Westphalian prisoner. "When the mother was dead, the major gave the order to shoot the child, so that the child should not be left alone in the world," which was accordingly done. Some are quite scandalized at the looting, others at the drunkenness; others more religious believe that all these things will bring down upon them the wrath of God.
