Too Anxious by Half. A vast number of people are need-lessly anxious about their manuers. Having been "house folks" all their lives, contentedly and usefully rounding out their days among kindred and neighbors who love and understand them and share their standards, says an editorial in the Home Journal, the are prone when they make a rare ex-cursion into another atmosphere to a painful self consciousness that spoils their pleasures.

Northwest Mounted Police.

The present strength of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police is now 55 officers, 540 non-commissioned officers, and constables, and 80 guides, interpreters, scoute and special constables, making a total of 684, and 576 horses. The total strength of all ranks is 129 less and 30 horses less than last year.

The force is divided as follows: Alberta 227, Saskatchewan 270, Northwest Territories 30. Yukon 141 and Travel is not at all necessary to culture. Some of the finest culture the world has ever seen owed nothing to travel. But there is one comfortable result of travel, and that is the assurance it gives that people are pretty much alike. The superficial traveler may be impressed by "how different" things abroad are from those at home, but the wise observer is always being newly made aware how much the same are things the world over.
So with the gift of tongues. One of the best services it does for us is to show how much in common different people have when they can understand "Woman's work is never done."

There is always something to do—running up and down stairs, lifting, bending, straining—no wonder the Kidneys become affected. That is why so many women suffer with headaches, lame back, dragging pains through the hips, nervousness, weak spells. When the Kidneys are weakened or strained, the each other. History is another help. The deeper into the past the student delves the more wonderfully he realuses how little time has altered in nature. And as for exalted rank and superior talents, it seems as if every one ought to enjoy the advantage of informal association with at least one celebrity, if only to prove how little real difference fame or splendor makes.

Knowing these things keeps one delightfully free from that diffidence which prevents many persons from appearing well in strange society and from getting that best of the stranger from getting that best of the stranger which he can give only to one with whom he can be at ease. When it comes to manners there are very few things, after all, that are essential, and Insures health to women who work. Bu-Ju keeps the Kidneys strong and healthy, purifies the blood supply, and acts as a gentle, strengthening tonic out the delicate female organs.

AFRICAN WITCH DOCTOR

PEST WHICH THE WAR HAS NOT ELIMINATED.

Are Present In Every South African Village - Kaffirs Revel In Witchcraft-They Are Credited With Every Calamity-Their Influence Is Enormous, and They Are at the Bottom of All Mischief.

Among the innumerable pests with which the unpeaceful land of South Africa is so liberally cursed, the witch doctor must take high rank.

I, myself have known a great many witch doctors of all degrees, from Eupajina, the mighty rainmaker, who professed to control the seasons, down professed to control the seasons, down to petty local practitioners who could do little more than smell out wizards and arrange to poison their neighbors, but of the whole number I cannot remember one whom I regarded with anything but disfavor, says a London Mail correspondent.

Source of All Trouble. Whenever there is troube in a vilwhenever there is troube in a village it is always safe to blame the witch doctor, for if he did not actually plan it, he certainly assisted in the later stages. If anyone dies mysteriously, twisted up into a knot by one of those ghastly vegetable prisons of of those ghastly vegetable poisons sedear to the heart of the Kaffir, you dear to the heart of the Kaffir, you may be sure the witch doctor supplied the dose. If a trader is boy-cotted, if his huts are burned and his cattle essegaied, it was the witch doctor who brought it about. If a mine suddenly ceases to get labor, if the boys run away without any apparent reason. It means that the place had allen under the ban of these ports. If a tribe rises against the witch man, it was the witch doctor who stirred up the passions of the people and who gave the signal for the first massacres.

Controls the Kaffir's life.

Controls the Kaffir's Life.

The influence of these men is enormous, for witchcraft controls every action of a Kaffir's life, from the cradle to the grave. At his birth the local magician threw the bones to discover if it were auspicious for the new arrival to live. His choice of a wife, his journeyings and hunting, his seed-time, the sale of his cattle and his daughters, his friendships and his vengeances, all are determined by the will of the spirits as interpreted by the witch doctor, and, even after death, the ghost of the departed still requires the ministrations of its former adviser.

ence, relieves the otherwise impossible tedium of the daily round in the kraals. Go into the native districts, live among the Kaffirs, learn their languages, watch them in the fields, in the kraals, at the beer drinks, get to know them as intimately as possible for a white man, and I guarantee you will never come across anything in the least resembling the assegai waving herces of whom you read in the book. But, none the less, you will see many interesting things, learn many gruesome secrets, as you sit beside the fire at night and listen to those deep, guttural voices.

Witchcraft All the Time.

There will be no hint of noble barbarism, no high-flown sentiment, no longings for independence from patrictic reasons. It will be witchcraft, witchcraft, all the time. Grim stories of uneasy spirits, the restless ghosts of the unburied dead, who cannot sleep with their fathers, but wander perpetually on the mountain sides, tales of the owl, the lion, and the snake, the sons of the evil spirit; tales of the owl, the lion, and the snake, the sons of the evil spirits; tales of the owl, the lion, and the snake, the sons of the evil spirits; tales of the owl, the lion, and the snake, the sons of the evil spirits; tales of the owl, the lion, and the snake, the sons of the evil spirits; tales of the visuander of the wixards who have been smalled out by the witch doctors and removed by poison, by the assegai, or by the knob-stick, a long list this, an appallingly long one.

It is a hideous revelation at first, until you get used to it. Then you accept it as inevitable, as part of the Kaffir's very existence, and you realize that no legislation can ever stop it, for prosecution is useless where evidence is unoblainable.

Discovery.

The Pelham twin who wore petticoats smiled in superior fashion on the

for his rebellious pupil. "Natalie has been waiting most an hour. She says your naughtiness will give her new money, maybe, and you'll be sorry when she's dead." "I won't give her anything of the sort, you ninn," replied the Pelham in pants as he jerked on his mitten.

"And I love Natalie much better than you do! Anyway, I was only kept in ten minutes, eh, Mr. Raymond?" Very gravely Douglas Raymond drew out his watch and glanced at it.
"Twelve minutes, and you might have gone two minutes ago if you had gether. Tell your nurse that the next time you are kept in for being a naughty boy she had best come in-side and wait."

The Pelham twins trotted sturdily toward the door, the boy flinging over his shoulder:

"Natalie is not our nurse. We don't have a nurse any more. She's our sister." Then, stopping stock still, he added: "And there will not be any next time. Cracky, won't Natalie be tickled when I tell her you thought she was Douglas Raymond sighed as the door closed on the twins. Then he crossed the room and stood looking down in the street. And for this he had taken high college honors;

He had just missed a small college professorship—through lack of influence—and with his mother dependent upon him he had not dared to refus the liberal financial offer of the master of Morris Manor, a flourishing private school overlooking the Hudson. Even that offer had not come until midwinter, after death had caused a vacancy on the Morris Manor staff and when Douglas had almost decided to give up his college ambitions and dig into com

Morris Manor was a boarding school for boys, with a few day pupils drawn from the rich owners of country homes thereabouts. Just across the tree lined avenue was a fashionable school for girls. Evidently from this school had come the small sister of his rebellions pupil. He leaned over the window ledge to see whether they were safely on their homeward way, and suddenly his fingers gripped the rough stone The twins were dancing up the street one on either side of a tall, slender girl, clad in a natty skating suit, with a scarlet tam-o'-shanter on her well poised head. "Natalie"- And he had not guessed.

However, he would know the graceful walk, the splendidly poised head, among a thousand. The trio disap-peared around the corner, and he hurried back to his desk.

"William Reginald Pelham." There it stood on the "D" class list. Douglas had not had time to become looking little laddie who said such astonishingly rebellious things in such a precise way had been known to him during that first school day only as If he had only known, mo certainly he would not have detained the boy and let her stand out in the What if she did have pneu-not carried out her original intention of going abroad to study art? And, if she was not studying, what was the pony's back or stacked together by the Pelham family doing at their country place in midwinter, with the social season in full swing in the city? He might have known that Willie was her brother. Her odd, demure way of saying startling things had first attracted his attention to her and finally nearly wrecked his last year in col-lege. How could he work, then, with the thought that love and the girl who was all in the world to him were alike beyond his reach? There was his future to carve, his mother to support, few of his father's debts to pay, and on the other side Natalie Pelham, the Pelham wealth, the Pelham position. She had been firting with him, of She had been firting with him, of course, not willfully, but just because course, not willfully, but just because it came as naturally to her as eating and drinking. She had never taken him seriously, and after commencement day, when he had gone out west to teach in a summer school and give his mother a little rest in a quiet summer resort, he had dropped out of her life just as if there had never been teas in the "frat" room, moonlight teas in the "frat" room, moonlight walks on the campus, football games and promenades which they had en-joyed in common. And here she was again, just when he needed to hold himself well in hand. One thing he must do-avoid her disturbing presence, her magnetic charm, if he possibly could.

Thereafter, in justice to the other pupils, he explained to himself, he showed no partiality to the Pelham twin. In fact, that youth, if he had not been House.

She must have changed, he argued to him-self. Certainly she had settled down, for she could not be doing the opera, teas and receptions and call for those

And then came the day of the blizzard. Raymond watched it shut down on Morris Manor and could hardly keep away from the window. Was she coming for those children on foot? came with a sleigh or carriage. Other children were claimed by fur clad foot-men or strong elder brothers. Nearly all the day pupils were gone.
