ENTLE THACKERAY.

ad Christmas Eve When His Light Went Out.

known Thackeray 18 years, and now him yet," said Douglas Jerrold was a reserve to the manner satirist and humorist which prevailed among his friends from being near to him, and yet when the humor suited him he would open his heart as though he had never known the feeling of reticence. He cared little for display and adulation, and when a banquet was tendered him on his departure for America he said he wished it were over, as such things always set him trembling.

"Besides," said he, "I'll have to make a speech, and what am I to say? I'll see if I can hammer out something. I am afraid it will be stammering by and by."

At the time "Vanity Fair" was published, Charles Dickens was producing his monthly form the story of "Dombey and Son." Thackeray read with eager delight each number as it came from the press. Where Dickens described the death of little Paul with a depth of pathos which produced a vibratory emotion in the hearts of all who read it, Thackeray seemed electrified at the thought that there was a man living who could exercise so complete a control over him. Putting the copy of "Dombey and Son" in his pocket, he hurried down to Mr. Punch's office and, dashing it down on the table with startling vehemence, exclaimed: "There's no writing against such power as this—one has no chance. Read that chapter describing Paul's death. It is stupendous!"

Thackeray was found dead in bed on the eve of Christmas, 1869. He had laid his "weary pen" aside and sunk into his last deep sleep after months and years of suffering.

My song, save this, is little worth. I lay the weary pen aside And wish for health and love and mirth. As fits the solemn Christmas morn. As fits the holy Christmas morn. Be this, good friends, our earnest still. Be peace on earth, be peace on earth. To men of gentle will.

If these simple but impressive words may be taken as a shadow of what his feelings may have been when called upon to lay aside his pen for the last time, we may well believe that at that sad moment his thoughts were full of prayer for the earthly peace of all—Detroit Free Press.

"TELL HER SHE MUST."

The Doctor's Mistake, Which Was Corrected by the Married Man. The family physician puffed meditatively at his cigar for a few minutes before coming down to business.

"I have been to see your wife, as you requested," he said at last, "and asked you to come in so that I could tell you what should be done. She's in a pretty bad way."

"Indeed?" "Yes. No regular sickness, you know, but generally run down and laid up. With rest and care she'll come out all right, but you'll have to look after her pretty closely."

"I beg your pardon?" "I say you'll have to look after her pretty closely. You'll have to appoint yourself sort of general overseer or supervisor of everything pertaining to her welfare for a time and be very strict with her too. In the first place, tell her she must!"

"Doctor, are you acquainted with my wife?" interrupted the husband. "Not intimately at all," replied the astonished physician. "I've been called upon to treat her once or twice, as you know, but that is all."

"Possibly that may be urged as an excuse," said the husband, "but it's not a particularly good one. There are women with whom you are quite well acquainted, are there not?"

"Certainly." "Married women?" "Many of them."

"And still you advise me to tell my wife that she must do something or other?" "The physician looked at the husband, and the husband looked at the physician. "My dear sir," said the physician at last, "it flatters some men to talk to them that way, but I see you are a man of judgment and sense who prefers the truth to all else. Of course what I mean is that you ought to suggest to your wife that, if it is in accord with her judgment, possibly it might be a good thing to follow the advice that I will now give you. Naturally, being married, I know she had to you that 'must' is a word that ought to be eliminated from the English language or at the most confined to the intercourse of parents with children."—Chicago Post.

A Queer New England Retrospect. Hawthorne found romance on the shores of old New England, and there is a good deal of it unmined in the modern life of the Yankees. The following story of love and marriage, strange as it may seem, is known to the writer to be true:

Years ago a summer boarder at a cottage on a point of land which formed the protecting arm of the harbor of a fishing town in Massachusetts was about a girl baby only a few months old. He looked at the babe and admired; then said to the mother:

"Will you give me that babe for my wife?" "The mother had known the young man for several summers; she liked him, and therefore answered promptly, "Yes."

"Will you promise never to tell her that you have selected me as her husband?" "Yes."

The conditions of the singular betrothal were observed. The girl baby grew up and summer after summer the young man courted her. When she was 16, he married her, and not till then did she know that she had been betrothed to her husband while in her cradle. Can old romance be more romantic than this story of a New England fishing town.—Youth's Companion.

Stars, but Not in His Line. "You referred to this morning, sir," howled the eminent actor, "as the Algal of the theatrical profession!" Allow me to ask you, sir, if that is a miserable attempt to play upon the word 'alcohol,' as a reminder, sir, that I was once addicted to the excessive use of the intoxicating bowl!"

"By no means, sir," protested the newspaper man. "I meant by that expression to convey the idea that you were a 'variable star'—sometimes brilliant and at other times not so brilliant."

With a matured apology the eminent actor turned on his heel and stalked away. "And this," bitterly exclaimed the newspaper man, when alone again, "what comes of giving a dramatic assignment to an astronomer!"—Chicago Tribune.

A Dish of Worms. One of the choicest delicacies in Jamaica is a huge white worm found in the heart of the cabbage palm. It tastes when cooked like almonds.

LIFE ON JUPITER.

How It Would Appear as Measured by Terrestrial Standards.

Judged by our terrestrial experience, which is all we have to go by, the magnitude of a planet, if it is to bear life resembling that of the earth, is limited by other considerations. Even Jupiter, which, as our knowledge extends, represents the extreme limit of great planetary size, may be too large ever to become the abode of living beings of a high organization.

The force of gravitation on the surface of Jupiter exceeds that on the earth's surface as 2.64 to 1. Considering the effects of this on the weight and motion of bodies, the density of the atmosphere, the laws of pneumatics, etc., it is evident that Jupiter would, to say the very least, be an exceedingly uncomfortable place of abode for beings resembling ourselves. But Jupiter, if it is ever to become a solid, rocky globe like ours, must shrink enormously in volume, since its density is only 0.24 as compared with the earth. Now, the surface gravity of a planet depends on its mass and its radius, being directly as the former and inversely as the square of the latter. But in shrinking Jupiter will lose none of its mass, although its radius will become much smaller. The force of gravity will consequently increase on its surface as the planet gets smaller and more dense.

The present mean diameter of Jupiter is 86,000 miles, or 84,000 miles, then its surface gravity would exceed the earth's nearly five times. With one-half its present diameter the surface gravity would become more than ten times that of the earth.

On such a planet a man's bones would snap beneath his weight even granting that he could remain upright at all. It would seem, then, that, unless we are to abandon terrestrial analogies altogether and "go it blind," we must set an upper limit to the magnitude of an inhabited planet, and that Jupiter represents much more than a theoretical possibility.

Some of the Articles Which Are Passing or Have Passed Away. In England they have dolls, hop poles, large wooden rattles, smock frocks and shepherd's crooks, which are gradually disappearing. The use of the rattle for scaring beasts and birds must be very ancient. One such is mentioned in 1490, in the "Travels of Anselm, and Archbold, Soc. Durham and Northumb. iv. 300. Within my recollection nearly every Yorkshire farm boy had a large wooden rattle, or clacker, of his own making, which he used in his leisure time for his own amusement and to the disturbance of his neighbors.

With these should be classed the watchman's rattle (I used to visit an old lady who kept one in her bedroom for use in case of burglars), pinions (on which have been farmers' wives ride to market behind their husbands on horseback), spinning wheels, horn lanterns (in use long before the stamped tin lanterns), Italian iron and heaters (found in every house or clacker, of his own making, which he used in his leisure time for his own amusement and to the disturbance of his neighbors.

Instead of a chair she used an old box, and instead of a chair she used an old box. On dear, what a wife had I! salt boxes, which used to be hung up in nearly every farmhouse, in a recess near the chimney. Probably I am one of the last who have seen a performance on the salt box, and very clever and laughable it was. "The 60 years ago!"

In strains more sweet the salt box shall join. And clattering and battering and clapping combine. With a rap and a tap while the hollow side sounds, Up and down leaps the flap, and with rattling rebounds.

Milk kits have quite disappeared from this part of the country, and chopping blocks and knives, used for sausages and mince pies, are now rarely seen, instead of which the little machines sold by the ironmongers are used by every one.—Notes and Queries.

The Origin of Kew Gardens. Couriers could be dispatched to the ends of the land for the queen's formal bouquet, of which she had a performance on the salt box, and very clever and laughable it was. "The 60 years ago!"

Odd Chairs. This isn't a public meeting, but all the same, we invite you to take the chair, several in fact; the more chairs you take the handsomer and more attractive you will make your house. It's the height of oddity not to admire our old chairs, and surely no one is so odd as that.
