

MISTAKES AT ROYAL COURTS.

The queen's drawing-rooms, as the receptions given by Great Britain's Queen are called, are exceedingly formal occasions, guests and attendants being governed by certain fixed rules as inviolable as the laws of the Medes and Persians. Not long ago a very stout and dignified dowager left the royal presence covered with confusion and in anything but a Christian frame of mind. She had sunk low in a deep courtesy before the Queen and after kissing her royal hand was in the act of rising when she found her upward progress unaccountably arrested.

Again and again she made the attempt to recover the perpendicular, growing hotter and more confused at each attempt, and finally, while making a desperate effort, the good lady lost her precarious balance and sat down heavily on the floor.

In a moment one of the court officials in attendance hastened to her rescue, and she was with difficulty and amid scarcely suppressed merriment restored to her feet again. Her disaster had been quite innocently caused by the lady who was coming after her standing on her train, and, if looks could kill, that lady would certainly have been annihilated by the withering glance cast at her by the dowager as she swept out of the room.

In another case it is said that while a certain highly placed lady was in the act of kissing the Queen's hand a substantial portion of her front hair became detached and fell on the floor at the royal feet, leaving the lady with a frontal exposure more eloquent of intellect than beauty. To the credit of this unhappy lady let it be recorded that she calmly stooped, picked up the tresses and carried them off without a trace of discomposure.

But those ludicrous misadventures are not the monopoly of the fair sex. A once well known and corpulent city man who had survived the ordeal of the royal homage and was gracefully retiring from the presence found his legs mixed up with his sword so awkwardly that he stumbled and measured his length on the floor and resignedly lay there until he was rescued and restored to the vertical.

A pretty story is told of a fair debutante, the most beautiful girl of her year, and her presentation at court. She was on the point of retiring after kissing the hand of our present queen, who was taking the place of Queen Victoria, when in her preceding person she trod on her train and would have fallen, had not a court official, whose duty it was to be prepared for such contingencies, caught her in his arms.

Not many weeks later the young lady and her rescuer found themselves guests at the same country house and turned their singular introduction to such good account that within a year the wedding bells were set a-ringing.

It is not at all an uncommon experience for a lady—relying on the usual crowded drawing room and in order to avoid a long wait and a crush—to put off her arrival too

But these amusing adventures are by no means confined to the royal presence. The present practice is for a lady when she leaves the throne room to give her name to an official, who telephones for her carriage to be ready for her. On one occasion a lady after giving her name to the official made her way down to the entrance hall, and entered the waiting carriage, which drove off with her.

She had not proceeded far, however, before she recognized that the sumptuous vehicle in which she was driving was not hers and with much difficulty she succeeded in getting the coachman to pull up, when she discovered that she had innocently abducted the carriage of a certain duchess, whose name was almost identical with her own, with the important exception of the initial letter. When she succeeded in finding her own vehicle she ultimately drove away in a single brougham, which had evidently been hired for the occasion, to the scarcely concealed disgust of the dual coachman she had been compelled to discard.

"We have called," said the heathen, after the conventional compliments of the day had been passed, "to murder you."

The missionary's demeanor altered at once.

"Of course," said he, coldly, "I cannot permit you to murder me until you have given me satisfactory proof of your financial standing and ability to pay a suitable indemnity."

The heathen at once saw the force of this and withdrew, promising to come again to-morrow with collateral.

"If No One Ever Marries Me."
If no one ever marries me—
And they don't seem very keen,
For I can't pretend I'm handsome,
And my purse is rather lean—
If no one ever marries me,
I shall play at golf the whole day through,
And at bridge the living night.
I shall have a little sailing yacht,
And a motor all my own,
And I shan't be plagued with children's bills
For things that they've outgrown.
And when I'm sick of everything,
And dull as dull can be,
I shall think how glad I've made some girl
By a Bachelor, with apologies, in Punch.

long and miss the function altogether. But at least one lady just managed to save the situation by a tour de force.

The drawing room was over and the royal group was preparing to make its exit when a sound of voices in dispute was heard just outside the door. "But I must go in!" a high-pitched voice was heard to exclaim in resolute tones, and a moment later the scolded the belated owner of the voice, flushed with haste and argument, and made her way toward the royal group. With an encouraging smile the queen turned toward her and extended her hand; the lady courted and retired radiant at the thought that she had had her way, even in a royal palace.

Less fortunate was a debutante who on the eve of her presentation was seized with an illness which made it impossible for her to attend the court. Her name was sent in for the next drawing-room, but again she was disappointed, for her father's death made attendance impossible for at least a year, and when at last there seemed a prospect of success at the third attempt she met with a fatal accident in the hunting field and died on the very day when she should have made her courtesy to the queen.

On at least one occasion a debutante secured a presentation without going through any of the necessary formalities, and certainly without the approval of the queen and the responsible officials. In the middle of the stately function a noisome, which had in some incomprehensible way evaded the guardians of the portals, trotted into the room, cast an indifferent and by no means respectful glance at the royals and made his exit through the opposite door, quite ignorant of his daring defiance of all court etiquette.

A Philadelphia boy, five years of age, who had recently become the brother of another little boy, was sent to the grocery store the other day to get some loaf sugar.

By mistake the grocer gave him granulated, and the boy was sent back to have it changed.

"How do you like your new brother?" asked the grocer, as he was weighing out the right kind of sugar.

"Oh, I don't like him very much," the little fellow answered. "He cries all the time."

"Why don't you change him, then, as you do the sugar?"

"We can't change him now, 'cause we've used him three days."—Philadelphia Ledger.

TEMPTATIONS OF MIDDLE AGE

One the "I Am Holier Than Thou" Attitude Toward Youth.

I know no such persistent temptation for the middle-aged, none so subtle in its nature nor so disastrous in its consequences, as that which makes us like to seem to our juniors not only established in altogether virtuous ways, but as if we had been so established all our lives. It is not, I think, a very courageous attitude to take, especially before the young, who have no means of knowing what rapids was, their elders, have encountered when guiding to a present safety the frail crafts of our character.

The young, whose very nature it is to feel the differences that distinguish them as individuals from the rest of mankind, never fancy themselves so isolated as when they witness some of the older ones harbored in quiet ports apparently unassailed by tempests. Then it is that by very contrast the young imagine themselves as controlled by an adverse fate which has sent them adrift and alone on the sea of wild temptations over which no respectable old person could ever have been sent to sail. It is right to make them feel so, to ask myself often, gratifying as it may be to us to be generated? Opulent people are considered ill-bred who make the indigent feel poverty-stricken. It seems to me quite as culpable for the virtuous elderly to make the young stumble over himself a sinner.—April Century.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contains Mercury

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Burnt His "Breeches."

An eminent Chicago lawyer tells me this story, says a writer in the Brooklyn Eagle:

"My father always took a great interest in musical matters, and was often the patron of impetuous musicians. Among the latter I remember a certain Professor Schell, a fine pianist, who used to visit our house. The professor had been making a hard but unsuccessful struggle, had become almost disheartened, and was seriously thinking of giving up and returning to Germany. My father, who thoroughly liked him, had tried to encourage him, and had promised to aid him in finding pupils; but still the professor vacillated for many weeks. One afternoon he entered our library, followed by my father, and, walking solemnly up to my mother, said, with an air of profound gravity:

"Madam, I had burnt my breeches bathing me."

"Good gracious!" ejaculated my mother, with an involuntary, startled glance in the direction of the professor's coat tails.

"My father then proposed tactfully, the professor meanwhile nodding acquiescence: 'You will be glad to know, my dear, that what Professor Schell means by saying he has burnt his breeches behind him is that he has leaved a house here for a year and has now no choice but to stay.'"

"Oh!" exclaimed my mother, greatly relieved, 'How delightful!"
