CHAPTER X. Mrs. Clarence had married young, a man whose son was as old as herself; but she had given her spouse so much happiness and satisfaction that he had left her well dowered and perfectly free. She lived in the dower house on the estate, and her relations with her step-son and his young wife were perfectly friendly. She had been a most exemplary old man's wife; now she enjoyed her love of dirtation to the uttermost, being quite young enough and charming enough to receive attention anywhere. She was a warm-hearted woman, clever and well-read, had traveled greatly, and was intelligent enough to have made good use of her eyes on her travels.

Poor little Kathleen feit her own interiority besides the more brilliant and matured charms of her hostess, and sank into silence and duliness in a corner, un-Mrs. Clarence had married young, matured charms of her hostess, and sank into silence and dullness in a corner, until Mrs. Clarence, wearying of the amusement, sat down to her piano, and, while she played gay French romances, and sang in her sweet soprano the pretty, tender words of some of them, Hugh strolled back to his old seat by Miss Lancaster, and soon won the pretty smiles back by half a dozen whispered words and a tender, lowered tone. Hugh was in no haste to return to Marchmont House. The impulse which had moved him to put in an appearance at his sister's wedding had been a gentrous one.

From one.

He was fully aware that if it came to sir Edward's ears he would incur his inist severe displeasure; but he was too fond of his sister not to yield to the impuls which he felt would make her happies Still, he was by no means in a hur to face his father's displeasure, and hought it wiser to allow his wrath to of before venturing into his presence; so h sat before Kathle Lancaster, in Mrs. Clarence's pretty drawing room. Mrs. Clarence's pretty drawing room, with its shaded light and scented flowers, and amused himself by bringing the pretty rose color to the soft, rounded check, and making the girlish bosom rise and swell with suppressed emotion, never suspecting that the play to him might be death to the imposent unsuspecting death to the innocent, unsuspecting be death to the innocent, unsuspecting girl.

We will not blame him too harshly. Already, as Sir Edward Marchmont's son and heir, he had been the object of much tender interest, not only to match-making mammas, but to their apparently innocent and confiding daughters, and his past experience of garrison "hacks" and ball room belles may have made him wary. Suffice it to say that when the next day Kathleen Lancaster left for Paris with Mistress Avis and the muchenduring but indifferent Parker, she carried with her the recollection of a pair of gay brown eyes, a tender, smiling mouth, and a voice which had lowered its musically-deep tones when it spoke her name, "Kathie."

When Hugh rode through the quiet

When Hugh rode through the quiet lanes that night his thoughts were not with Kathie. He was thinking tenderly of the sister he had lost that day, and while he did so that sister was undergoing the greatest misery and suffering she could have known.

"Is Sir Edward in the library" he asked, as the butler handed him some letters which had arrived during his absence.
"Sir Edward started for town this morning, sir," was the answer. "He left by the express, and will be absent some days, he said.

Wondering at this unexpected depart-

Wondering at this unexpected departure, but attributing it to the restlessness proceeding from the excitement of the night before—perhaps coupled with remorse—Hugh went up to his room and read his letters.

One was from a brother officer, and it contained news concerning the health of a favori's horse, which was to run in the Grand Military the following week, and which made Hugh give his valet orders to have everything ready for an early departure by the morning express. departure by the morning express.

It was late in the afternoon when Douglas and Andree arrived at the quaint little roadside station belonging to the village of Wildlea; and when the former asked a porter if he knew where the Maisonnette was, the man gave him a surprised look and replied:
"Quite three miles from here, sir."
"Is there no vehicle to be had?" said Douglas, in dismay.
""Fraid not, sir." the porter said. "The 'Pea Hen has a fly, but 'tis out for the day."

Almost in despair Douglas turned to his wife, who was inclined to laugh at the odd adventure.

As she stood there in her long gray cloak, her large hat shading her fa face, she looked distinguished enough command attention anywhere, as strangely out of place at a little country

"Let us walk it, Douglas," she said, lightly. "Three miles are," lightly. "Three miles are nothing. I have often done ten in the mountains."
But Douglas went to look for the station master, to see if he could help him out of his dilemma. He found him talking to a tall, fair-haired young man, who looked like a gentleman, and smiled at the mischance.

"If you will allow me to suggest," he said, "I shall be most happy to put you down. I pass within half a mile of the Maisonnette on my way home, and it will Maisonnette on my way home, and it will be a pleasure to have companions on a long, lonely drive. It is a most selfish offer." he went on, interrupting Douglas in I s thanks; "a most interested one."

The carriage which was waiting for him was a mail phaeton, and before he got in he apologized to Douglas for being obliged to transform him into a groom for the nonce.

"Get a horse at the 'Pea Hen,' and ride after us. Johnson," he added to the servant, who was left behind, and when the latter touched his cap with a "Yes, Sir Konneth," Andree knew that this obliging gentleman must be Sir Kenneth Don-aldson, of whom Mrs. Clarence had spoken as the owner of large estates in

"It is rather a wild, lonely place," he said to Andree, as they drove rapidly on; "but if you are fond of sketching from nature you will find many a lovely bit to add to your sketch-book. I am 'living alone and quite in the rough at the Hall, but if you will come up some afternoon and see the pictures, I daresay my old housekeeper can give you some tea, and it will give me very great pleasure. I heard so much about poachers and enheard so much about poachers and en-puraging vice," he added, with comic stress, "that I really was obliged to me back. I fear it was not exaggerat-either; but the Continent is so very scinating that I shall never be content settle down in England."

The three-mile drive was quickly got

"This is the Maisonnette," he said. "If this is the maisonnette, he said. "If Mrs. Clarence is as lively as when I saw her at Venice four years ago I don't wonder at her seldom visiting here; but it is a lovely spot," he added, smiling at Andress's rapturous delight at the abundance of late flowers and the luxuriant vegetation.

An old man, with a countenance more expressive of surliness than any other feeling, came out to open the gate, and although he tried to put some cheerfurfeeling, came out to open the gate, and although he tried to put some cheerfurness into his manner, the alacrity was evidently forced, and Andree could not help feeling that they were not very welcome gueets. Nor did she fall to of serve the start with which Amos Kenney—for the old man rejoiced in that strange cognomen—perceived their charloteel, nor the almost offensive servility with which he returned his careless nod.

"Promise me that you will honor me with a visit, Mrs. Lancaster," pleaded the young baronet, gaily. "The sight of a lady is like coming upon an oasis fin the desert. I give you my word I had not seen one for three months when I caught sight of you at the station. You will come, will you not?"

"With much pleasure, replied Andree, returning his cordial hand-clasp, "We must ever look upon you as a friend in need, Sir Kenneth."

"If you know how glad I am at the 'need' which allowed me to be the 'friend,'" he said, smillng, as he drove off, glancing back once for a last look at her as she stood watching him drive away, with her hand through her husband's arm.

WOODSTOCK'S TEAM.

The greatest of the many difficulties which prevent themselves is that of getting suitable teams to come here to play. London and the teams of the Hamilton City League are about the only teams available, unless an occasional game is arranged with Canadian League teams. There are plenty of ball teams in the country, but they are at such a distance and their expenses would consequently be so heavy that the limited patronage with which the locals have been favored would scarcely warrant their being brought here. The situation is unsettled as yet, but favorable developments are hopefully looked forward to .- Woodstock

The fond mother dreams great dreams of baby's future as she holds the sleeping little one in her arms. But the dreams will never come true unless she has given him a strong body and a healthy mind. Children die in hosts, or live to struggle through life feeble of body and dull of mind because the mother was unfit physically and mentally for motherhood. Women who use Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription endow their children with strong bodies and bright minds. It is every mother's duty to give her child the advantages of a healthy body and mind. A weak or sickly woman cannot do this. "Favorite Prescription" makes weak women strong and sick

Mrs. Orrin Stiles, of Downing, Dunn Co., Wis., writes: "I have been intending to write to you ever since my baby was born in regard to what your 'Faverite Prescription' has done for me. I caunet praise it enough, for I have not been as well for five years as I now am. In July last I had a baby boy, weight in pounds, and I was only sick a short time, and since I got up have not had one sick day. I have not had any womb trouble since I got up. I was not only surprised myself but all of my friends here are surprised to see me so well."

CRICKET. A HOTLY CONTESTED MATCH. One of the most interesting games of cricket ever played in London took place yesterday on the military grounds, between the Forest Cricket Club and the Wolseley Barracks Cricket Club. The Forest club made 72 in the first inning to the Barracks' 71, when luncheon was served. Then the fight for supremacy began. The Barracks managed to get the Forest club out for 66 runs in the second inning, thus leaving the Wolseley Barracks club to make 67 to tie, or 68 to win. This they just managed to do with a wicket to spare. The game was magnificently contested on both sides, bowling and fielding being extra good.
Pte. Clarkson secured no less than 11 wickets for the home club. Quarter-master-Sergt. Dunlevy's 31, not out, and 10, was a splendid exhibition of cricket, and he was loudly applauded at the close of the inning. Sergt. Beals' 20, and Lieut. Meredith's 16 and 11 were welcome additions to the military score; and Quartermaster-Sergt. Sick in the second heat, and was Dunlevy's and Sergt. Farnsworth's drawn after having won the first fielding, especially in catching, were noticeable features of the game. For noticeable features of the game. A RECORD AT DETROIT. Detroit, Mich., July 18 .- In the freefor-all pace yesterday afternoon at the Grosse Point track, Coney, the fa-vorite, went the fastest mile ever traveled in a contest on the track, going the distance in 2:02, which is three-quarters of a second faster than the gelding's previous record. It was the third day's racing of the Detroit Driving Club's annual summer meeting. In the free-for-all mer meeting. In the free-for-all pace Indiana had the pole in the first heat. The four horses were sent off to a perfect start. As they rounded the first turn Coney took the pole and led with Anaconda next. When they flashed by the quarter pole everyone realized that it was a fast quarter and enthusiastic cheers greeted the figures that were hung out by the timers—29% seconds. With Coney still in the lead they passed the half-mile post in 1:00 flat, the three-quarter pole in 1:31%, and Coney whizzed under the wire in 2:02 flat, winner by three lengths. In the second heat Coney was favorite in the auction at $50 to $25 for the field. It was a fair start, and Coney and Anaconda were in front, racing together to the quarter, which was done in 29 seconds flat. Just as the figures were hung out, Coney broke, and Anaconda shot ahead alone.
With the others five lengths behind he paced the half in :591/2, one of the best performances ever seen, and duplicated Coney's time to the threequarter pole, 1:31¼. The mile, how-ever, was three-quarters of a second slower, 2:0234. Coney made up a great deal of the ground lost by his break, but was several lengths behind at the finish. His record performance used Coney up, and in the last heat Anaconda won all the way, with Connor second at the wire. # Shape-retaining,

When you step down, your foot sinks into the Resilia Centresole, away from the toe cap.

This makes the shoe a size larger inside, when your foot is widest, so the upper leather is never stretched out of shape over ball.

When you lift your foot, the insole expands from the outsole, thus taking up slack in the leather, preventing wrinkling and over running on sides.

The shoe thus retains shape and wears longer, because it is never over-stretched.
