FACES TRIPLE ALLIANCE

London, March 10 .- One of the most notable features in the designs of the new armored ships of the great powers in comparison with those of ten years ago, the paper says, is that most countries which were then content with vessels, which, judging from their type of radius of action, were intended primarily for coast defense, are today projecting ships, almost without exception, first-class. Captain Mahan has proved a most expensive philosopher. He has read history, to such purpose that he has convinced the world, and events have served but to confirm his conclusions, that Great Britain is faced not merely a dual alliance, but by a triple alliance, all busily adding to their strength afloat, while, as usual with new adherents, the United States, his latest convert, is a most enthusiastic supporter of the teaching of the past.
