was practiced in the fourteenth century I cull a few from the archives of the city of London. In 1348 proceed were taken against a butcher for selling putrid meat. Three reasons were alleged against this conduct at his trial efore the Mayor and Aldermen. It was deceitful and dishonest; dangerous to the public health; it brought scandal and disgrace upon the Mayor, corpora-tion, and all the inhabitants of the city that a Londoner should behave so. fter investigation he was found guilty and condemned to be taken with his meat carried in front of him, to pillord in Cornhill, and while he stood therein the carrion he had tried to sell was burned under his nose. It is well know that the pillory was an instrument in which the culprit was fixed, incapable of movement, exposed to the contempt of the people. The offence of the culprit was always publicly proclaimed, and according to the riews of the spectators the punishment might be severe or otherwise. If they disliked the offence or the offender their contempt would take the proverbial and preible form of rotten eggs and dead cats, and the trader would make a closer acquaintance with his own wares, both raw and cooked, than he might find
