The Vermont Experiment Station at Burlington has had the best of success for several years in the curing of corn fodder outside the sile by stocking without husking, in very large stocks, containing anywhere from a ton upward in a stock. When the stalks were thus set up the tops were drawn together as tightly as two men could do it with a large rope and then bound with cord. After they had stood and shrunk for about a fortnight, the bands were tightner. This served to keep the rain and snow out quite completely and the fodder keep excellently well. When the last was fed out in the spring sometime after the snow was gone, it was still bright green in the middle of the stocks and showed no signs of heating or decay. Two extensive trials have shown moveaue when the ears were left on the stalks than when they were-busked.

Wheat ranged to-day between 60½c and 62c, closing at 60½c. The sensational reports sent from New York which caused yesterday's advance were not confirmed to-day. Outside buying was light, and heavy purchases in the Northwest to come here exerted a weakening influence.
