Dawson, Monsignor Hamel, Archbishop O'Brien, Hon. F. G. Marchand and others. There is no more illustrious society in Canada than this, and its history is an interesting chapter in our higher national life.

Bret Harte, Henry James, Miss Wilkins, Mark Twain, Stephen Crane, Conan Doyle, Stanley Weyman, Anthony Hope—all these writers will be weighed and estimated by David Christie Murray in the last of his magnificent series of articles on his Contemporaries in Fiction—a series which has attracted attention in every quarter of the English literary world.

Hagar of the Pawnshop. Every chapter of this story of Great Britain's metropolis is complete in itself, is in fact a short story; together, the twelve stories will comprise Fergus Hume's greatest novel.

The Universities of Nova Scotia will be profusely illustrated, and will be worth some attention. It will be especially interesting to readers in the Maritime Provinces.

Other Good Things which cannot be here enumerated will appear in "The Canadian Magazine" for October. Each issue will contain several short stories, the departments will be kept up to date, and the artistic appearance of the magazine kept worthy of its unique position as the national publication of Canada.
