

this direction. His first substratum was a slow ortho-chromatic, and upon that spread one or two emulsions of high and highest sensitiveness; working upon the premises, that halation occurred less with dyed than plain plates. Since then he has also prepared another brand, simply with plain bromide of silver emulsions of different degrees of sensitiveness. It is said that either of these plates work rapidly and can safely be used for instantaneous exposures, and that halation has been reduced to nil. The reversal of the image is evidently caused by the same action of light as in halation, but that action has ceased before halation is produced."

The first picture was taken on ordinary "Eagle," and the second on an "Imperial" non-halation. Both negatives were exposed on the same subject one immediately after the other and developed in the same disk at the same time; and absolutely no favor shown.
