

child labour, access to legal reforms, human rights training and religious tolerance. Projects are aimed at strengthening community groups and NGOs, improving governance, and broadening participation in decision making and in the allocation of resources and benefits. Multilateral support is also provided to the ICRC for its programs in Indonesia and East Timor.

In July 1994, the Indonesian government cancelled the Sulawesi Rural Development Project executed by the University of Guelph apparently because of the latter's identification with an independent consultant's report critical of Indonesia's human rights record. Canadian regret at this decision, especially in light of the project's obvious benefits for the Indonesian people, was expressed at senior official levels in both Ottawa and Jakarta.
