THOUGH BLIND, TRAVELS ALONE

Girl Journeys From Kansas City To New York; Writes of What She "Sees."

NEW YORK, Nov. 18 .- Blind from birth, without excess funds to pay for guidance and attention, Carroll Rickert, a young girl, recently made her first journey on the cars alone, and she chose for this great adventure the distance between Kansas City and New

No one met her at points where it was necessary to change cars; she was in no one's care. When a storm de-layed the train six hours coming into Cleveland, and she realized that she was to be on the train a night longer than her funds guaranteed, she was not

Friends of friends were to meet her in New York. They failed. She did not know their names nor their addresses, but she recalled the address of a family whose son she knew in Kansas, and calling a taxi went out there.

"It was away out in East One Hun-kansas, and calling a taxt went out there.

"It was away out in East One Hundred and Fifty-third street," she says, "so you can imagine what my taxicab bill was. I did not even know if they still lived there, and was so glad when the driver helped me up the steps and I found the woman I was seeking. Through the editor of a magazine for the blind I afterwards secured a boarding place nearer town."

Miss Rickert studied music and journalism in the University of Kansas and came to New York that she might perfect herself in music and perhaps interest publishers in music of her own composition. To pay her way, for her father is a farmer and they haven't an abundance of this world's goods, Miss Rickert is writing about New York as "seen" by one who is blind.

Meets Helen Keller.

"I think I did an interview with Helen Keller quite well," she says, "and personality work is what I like best. Then I wrote up Saint Patrick's Cathedral as I 'saw' it. Isn't it a beautiful place? My latest story was what I saw in Asbury Park. I have a guide to take me to these places that I write about, and to take me to my music lessons, and I pay her for her trouble. Naturally, she tells me of all we are seeing, but my imagination is so active I try to write scenes as they appear to me.

"Some days I get discouraged because it is so hard to remember when I write that I do not see as other folks see, and this does not please the editor. But I try to keep up my courage. It means so much to my mother to see my stories in print, and to me it means money to pay for my music."

RUN ELEVATOR FOR MEN ONLY

N. Y. Store Executives Find Sterner Sex Shrink From Women's View.

New oYrk, Nov. 18.—Department store executives profess to have made the discovery that the male of the species is more modest than the female. One Fifth avenue store is now running an express elevator on a 20-second schedule to afford shrinking he-violets utter privacy in their journey to the department where men's wear is sold. This elevator does not stop between the street and the tenth floor, thus saving time as well as mental anguish saving time as well as mental anguish for its passengers. "Twenty seconds from fifth avenue" is the slogan proone of the executives of this department responsible for the change recently said that men who came to the store to buy clothing would not recently said that men who came to the store to buy clothing would not take off their coats and vests in a de-partment that divided its floor space with drygoods, millinery or other mer-chandise that attracted women. Those who were brave enough to shed their apparel under such circumstances want apparel under such circumstances went through frightful anguish in the pro-cess. Many swore outright, and a few blushed when they detected a woman watching their evolutions.

"While we have no cast iron rule forbidding women to ride on this 20-second limited, employees do not encourage joy-riding," said one executive. "The elevator girl frequently shouts, 'Express to the tenth floor,' and that frightens most of the women away. They feel that their whole day has been spoiled unless they can get off at every floor and look around. The men are different. They tume and fuss Flee From Women.

off at every floor and look around. The men are different. They fume and fuss if they are asked to ride in a local elevator, and women elbow them around as though they had no right to be there at all. Most of the victims take their shrinking bifurcated shapes into a corner of the car, where, hat in hand, they cringe until they can escape."

This department head said that when men stepped off the lift and saw several women, their first instinct was Men are instinctively modest, it was

Men are instinctively modest, it was made clear by the trained observer who has spent time and money studying them. Even villains with patent leather hair, high-waisted coats and very tight soft collars back down at the prospect of having a coat fitted where women may or may not solemnly and curiously watch the process. If fully clothed they would no doubt run screaming from the scene.

Women Don't Linger.

Women Don't Linger.

These are a few of the reasons why the general disposition in large department stores all over the country is to segregate the men's wear trade. Women for their part do not share a similar aversion to the company of the opposite sex in their buying. They will burst in anywhere when carried away on a gust of shopping zeal, but as a rule they do not linger on a floor given rule they do not linger on a floor given rule they do not linger on a floor given over entirely to men.

Another retail executive who is superintendent of a large Fifth averue department store, says that women are not at all frightened by men while undergoing a fitting. In some dress departments they stroll around quite freely in semi-negligee watching the

While there may be cave men aplenty in this world, mer-chants believe they work to better ad-vantage in a taxicab or a secluded corner of a conservatory than any-

HUNTER HAS THRILLING EXPERIENCE ON TRIP

Oroville, Nov. 18.—The sufferings of William Roscoe, conductor on the Western Pacific Railroad, whose leg was broken while he was hunting in the wilds of the Feather River canyon and his experiences as he lay alone in the forest through the night, were told by friends who accompanied Roscoe on his which accompanied Roscoe on his hunting trip.

While separating from his companions, Roscoe slipped from a high rock, and his right leg was fractured just above the knee. Too late in the afternoon to attempt to reach civilization, the local man lay in the canyon all night. Early the next morning his companions found him. They immediately started out for help, only to become lost themselves.

As Roscoe patiently waited for his friends to return, G. B. Voorhees and Charles Thompson, local huntsmen, suddenly came into view. They carried Roscoe to the Western Pacific tracks, then rushed him to Oroville on the first train going west. Roscoe's friends, in the meantime, found their way back into civilization.
