THIS WEEK AT THE THEATRES

Yesterday night at the Royal Alexandra, Mr. Faversham presented "Tne World and His Wife," adapted from the Spanish of Jose Echegaray by Charles Frederic Nirdlinger. It is a problem play with a moral, but it is not so much the problem with which it is concerned as the untoward influence which current rumor and gossip exerts over the destinies of those whom it implicates. Left to themselves their better nature and moral principle would have kept them from fault. As it is perversion and misrepresentation drives them into justifying all that has been charged against them.

The author, Jose Echegaray, was born in Madrid and became a famous mathematician and engineer. In 1873 he was minister of public works and finance in the Spanish Government and won reputation as a political reformer and radical statesman, In addition Echegaray won his way steadily to the position of the most popular dramatist in Spain of the nineteenth century and that tho his subjects, in accordance with Spanish temperament, were usually gloomy and sad. century and that the his subjects, in accordance with Spanish temperament, were usually gloomy and sad. Among his principal dramas was "El Gran Galecta" published in 1881, of which an English translation appeared in 1896. "The World and His Wife" is an adaptation of "El Gran Galecta" the name being taken from one of the most tragic episodes in the divine comedy of Dante, that of Francesca da Rimini. There the book was the undoing of the

In the former sketch the grand march with characteristic tableaux, is well given, the drill training of the girls showing up with pretty effect. In the olio, Grace Orma, six feet toll, made a hit by throwing at the crowd a few long lean jokes, while the pretty Tanner sisters proved to be a couple of clever step dancers. The three Henmans are about as clever artists on bicycles as one would expect to see. This feature concludes with an exciting one mile race with two girls on a tandem racing a man on a single bicycle. Mae Onletta and Fred W. Taylor sing.

The musical numbers were excellently rendered by a large chorus of pretty girls, artistically costumed. The show concluded with a "Devil dance," gracefully executed by Clare Burg, with Peter Burg as the devil, which was well appreciated by the crowd.

Festival of the Lilies.

If the New York and Chicago critics had been in Massey Hall last night to hear the singing at the "Festival of the Lilies," they would have understood why Toronto is the greatest choral city in America. For on the stage were seven hundred young people from 8 to 14 years of age, thoroly trained by that master of vocal art. Liew Rees, supervisor of public school music in Toronto, and instructor of the chorus for the "Festival of Lilies." Here, then, was material for the big choral societies of the city—and first-class material, too.
