It is the hardest, most taxing work that I have ever done, but I owe it a great debt of gratitude, for I know that it has made me grow. My friends ask me if it is not a great Train. It is, but I am grateful for that, too. In life all development comes fliru strain. A muscle is built up by using it beyond its normal capacity. The mind awakens its possibilities only by accomplishing the work which it has dreaded as impocible. Character forms and grows by meeting and overcoming difficulties and pain. In art the ways of development are analogous to those of life. To grow as an actor one must alternative walks and capacity to those of life.
