Lynch got into his sleigh and drove home. On arriving home (it was Saturday night) he discovered that instead of his own fine horse, he had one belonging to some other person. After thinking the matter over he decided to come to Portland, and thought he would find his horse with Mr. Blizzard. He came to Portland and demanded his horse. Mr. Blizzard refused to give it up, saying it was a fair swap. From words they almost came to blows, until the Police interfered and took both the horses in charge, until the ownership was proven. This morning the matter was privately settled, Mr. Lynch paying Mr. Blizzard $8 and taking his horse back again. This was done by the advice of several gentlemen in Portland, who did not want to see two horses lost complete-
