Editor's Talk

OUR arrangements for the new CANADIAN COURIER which is to appear on December 7th, are approaching completion. The improved mechanical equipment and organisation will enable us to publish later news and more news photographs. This, at least, is our expectation based upon careful planning and numerous experiments. All the advantages will not be apparent at once, but will appear gradually.

In that issue a new serial story entitled "Life's Chequerboard," will begin. The author is the well-known British novelist, Helen Wallace, and among its taking features is the fact that it is not long enough to weary the average reader.

At the same time a series of illustrated articles on "Sport" by H. J. P. Good, the well-known authority on the more dignified pastimes of the country. Mr. Good was until recently editor of the Toronto "Sunday World," and is known to fame as the editor of the first sporting page that ever appeared in a daily paper published in North America. These articles will be historical and reminiscent in addition to dealing with present conditions.

For the last time we remind the subscribers that, beginning with December 1st the new subscription price will come into force and no renewals can be accepted at the $2.50 rate after that date.
