FEELING "DOWN" CAN HAPPEN TO ANYONE

Mood changes are quite normal and can stem from coping with the daily problems and worries of life. When mood changes become so extreme that they can't be shaken off, then what otherwise could be a simple case of the blues can become a problem. A common sign of depression is a change in everyday normal spirits and approach to life. Look for these changes:

- inability to make decisions
- sleeplessness
- anxiety
- physical upsets
- extreme preoccupation with the past
- gloomy, pessimistic mood
- sadness and crying spells

There is no question that the lifestyle and habits we acquire have an impact on our mental health. Try to face problems and deal with them. Pushing them to one side can build up an emotional burden that can become very difficult to bear. Also recognize that, in certain circumstances, feeling depressed is normal and has to be worked through. People who set a heavy pace in their lives need to learn to relax. Our systems can't keep up with steady pressure indefinitely without problems.
