PROPERTY MISREPRESENTED

Will innocent misrepresentation of property void a contract and entitle a purchaser to money paid down?

SUBSCRIBER.

Ans.—Any misrepresentation would make a contract voidable, but would not void a contract; that is, in an action to set aside the contract all the particulars of the misrepresentation should be stated, and would be a ground for the claimant to set aside the contract. This would not be granted, however, unless it was shown that the misrepresentation was of such a character as to go to the root of the contract. It is a purchaser's duty as well as his privilege four walls, and also below and above the ice.

Good drainage is necessary. It should not be possible for water to be held in sawdust. Floor under ice should be slightly higher than ground around. Some put poles in under layer of sawdust to assist water to escape.

Any kind of roof that will keep out rain will do, but there must be free ventilation in space between roof and ice. If possible, have wide opening on north side.

MORE CLYDESDALES COMING

Another shipment of Clydesdale stallions and fillies will be brought to Western Canada from across the water. J. A. Turner is now on his way across the water and hopes to return early in November. The public can expect that this shipment will do justice to the high reputation Mr. Turner enjoys in selecting good animals. Western Canada cannot well have too many good horses.

COOK OR PEARY AT THE POLE

Discussion in the press recently has taken much space in regard to the finding of the North Pole. With Dr. Cook, who claims to have been at to make a personal investigation and satisfy himself of the truth of statements made. Not having done this he is bound to fulfil his contract.

BUILDING ICE HOUSE

How can I best build an ice-house? I intend building it in one corner of a small building, which will serve as a roof for same, and inclose two sides of the house. Kindly give me your idea in planning for proper drainage, air-proof construction, etc.

Ans.—Having decided on the size required, line up the two inner sides of the building which are to serve as sides of the ice-house with inch lumber to the height desired, having first made sure that studding and posts are strong enough to stand pressure. Next, if the floor is the earth, as it is best to be, set posts two feet or more into the ground on the lines of the two walls to be added inside the building, setting posts not more than three feet apart, and having some means of holding tops of posts strongly in place. The top of these posts need not be much higher than the ice when house is filled. Line up on inside of posts with inch lumber. Always, for ice-houses, line up on the inside, as, if put on the outside, the pressure would pull nails and spring the boards out. Make allowance in estimating space needed for a foot space between each side of each of the that important quarter of the globe in April, 1908, and Commander Peary, who says he was there about a year later, each insinuating that the other is mistaken, the public will be interested in seeing absolute proof from either.

After an interview with Dr. Cook, William T. Stead concludes as follows:

"Peary comes back fresh from the polar sea. Between Cook and the pole there are grim memories of long months of fierce battling with ice floes and polar bears, of a prolonged combat with the Arctic region in its fiercest moods. Peary had companions with whom he can fight his battles over again until he has the last details of his campaign elaborately impressed upon his brain. Cook, along, with Esquimos, is in a very different position. Looking back over the crowded week that followed Cook's arrival at Copenhagen one thing stands out conspicuous—that this American citizen never discredited his country by any high-falutin-vulgarity or ungenerous cavilling against any brother explorer. He impressed every one from the King of Denmark down, as a simple-minded, honest man, not a bit of a bounder. I believe him to be absolutely unprovoked by nature with the necessary outfit of a faker.
