BARROW DISCOVERS THE FAMOUS WAGNER Develops Him in the Old Atlantic Association Nearly Thirty Years Ago.

Wandering through the pages of baseball history, one comes upon the statistics that the Atlantic Association was launched January 29, 1889, just twenty-seven years ago at a meeting of representatives of clubs in Newark, Jersey City and other municipalities which thirsted after baseball glory. The name is reminiscent of many things. Since 1870, when the Brooklyn Atlantics walloped the Cincinnati Red Stockings, and reduced the swelling of the domes of Redland fans to the name of the well-known ocean has figured prominently in diamond annals. There have been several Atlantic leagues, the last effort in that direction having been made in 1914, although the circuit didn't even start last year. It is said that the name was never very popular with the old-time players, as being too suggestive of water, but in spite of that prejudice it is a name associated with many glorious traditions of the great American pastime. Greatest of the glories of the old Atlantic league, and most enduring of its traditions, is the fact that it was from that circuit that Hans Wagner started out on his conquering major league career. Honus had played ball in Mansfield, O., Steubenville, O., Warren, Adrian, Mich., and Warren, Pa., before joining the Paterson club in the Atlantic League, but he had gained little in laurels or money up to that time, and it was in the Silk City that he developed into a star. Edward G. Barrow, now head of the International League, was the manager of the Paterson Atlantic League club in 1896. Honus and his brother Al had become the property of the Pittsburgh club, but Honus wasn't needed by the Pirates, so Barrow made a proposition to Kerr, Barrow's manager, to let Wagner, but Kerr thinking he meant Al, was wretchedly disappointed. When Kerr was informed that it was Hans that Barrow had in mind, he promptly told Barrow that he could have the Dutchman as a gift. It was soon demonstrated that Barrow had the right dope in signing Honus. The Flying Dutchman, earlier in his career, had tried to be a pitcher, but he was so wild that he walked about half the batters. When he could get speed, however, he was almost invincible, for he had terrific speed. During his Atlantic League career, Honus was principally a third-sacker, although occasionally used at the initial sack. During his first season with Paterson he batted .348. He struck with Paterson until mid-season, in 1897, hitting the pill for .379 before he was sold to the Louisville club of the National League. Barrow got $2,250 for the player who had been turned over to him as a gift. His stick work really broke up the Atlantic League, and Pittsburgh offered $1,000 for him. Barrow struck out for $1,500. Then several other clubs began bidding, and the price was run up to $2,250, at which figure the Colonels landed him. When the Colonels landed him, he was transferred to Pittsburgh Hans returned to the city where a few years before he had been considered worthless. One of the most valued possessions of the veteran Honus is the gold hunting case watch which was presented to him by the Atlantic League fans of Paterson when he left the Silk City. The watch is inscribed with the date and circumstances of its presentation, and Wagner would sooner part with almost any other of his possessions than that tinker.

HEROES OF ANZAC Tribute to the Noble Dead on the Gallipoli Peninsula. The solemn beauty of Westminster Abbey, which echoes with the story of our past, is a fitting shrine in which to commemorate the noble "Anzac" dead. Not alone because of the valor, the fortitude, and the sacrifice, are the memories of those lives laid down, precious to the Empire but because they symbolize the high qualities which throughout centuries have gone to the building up of the British race. The courage and the chivalry of our forefathers lived again in those devoted men of Gallipoli, who have passed on to draw closer together and make of us one people. As a Canadian, I speak with certainty when I say that in no part of the Empire is the service the Anzacs have rendered more universally recognized than in Canada. We feel that their splendid story is our pride and honor too, and that they have to bring home to us afresh the truth that though seas may roll between, we are all Mother country, and daughter nations, one Empire. Not each for us, but one for all—we die, we live—George McBrown, European Manager of the C.P.R.
