INCREASING INTEREST IN BETTER ENGLISH CLASSES

The Better English Class has become a real institution and each meeting becomes more interesting and instructive, if possible, than the one previous.

The good attendance, the cool, attractive class-room, and the eager attention of the class all contribute towards the undoubted success of the work. Miss Archibald feels in starting the class in Wolfville that it is all worth while and the effort expended is fully justified.

The mastery of the pronunciation of difficult words is proving an easy and delightful pastime. Tea cup conversations containing the following idioms and pronunciations are making an indelible impression. Even such tyrants as shall and will are becoming willing slaves.

All are looking forward to Monday evening when "Slang", its uses and abuses, will be the subject under discussion.

The following are examples of some of the work: Pronunciations—evening, ally, cupola, culinary, essential, adult, adept, electricity, illustrate, clematis.

The fine difference of meanings between the following words—likely and liable, purpose and propose, etc.

The correct use of like—as, if I was—if I were, and many others.

The proper preposition to use with accuse, acquaint, die, etc., with the reasons why. When to use glad of, glad for; taste of, taste for.

The Question Box. Is it proper to reply to the question, "How are you today?" by saying "I am nicely today, thank you?"

Should one use is or are with government, delegation, committee?

When should one use fetch and carry?

Why is it wrong to say, "He claims that," etc.

Should one say somebody's else, or somebody else's?

Why do we say, "She is one of those who sing with good accent?"

Please discuss the use of "guess".
