WEATHER FORCES

'SENSIBLE' STYLES

Necks and Pumps for the Moment.

New York, Feb. 23.—Whether the cause is common sense, fear of influenza or a change in the styles, there has been a great change in feminine apparel on the so-called streets in the last ten days. Pumps and silk stockings practically have disappeared. Skirts have lengthened to what used to be called "sensible," and now barely clear the shoe tops. Fur have been fastened at the throat and rouge and powder have not been so noticeable.

Experts in these times are inclined to blame the change upon the weather alone. It is said that no question of health has entered into the calculation—that it is merely a matter of change in style being forced by excessive discomfort. No matter how trim the foot and ankle it has been impossible to wear pumps in the slush and snow. They come off. Short skirts are still adorable, it is said, but their real purpose is to display silken hose, and when it is impossible to wear these limp draperies who wants to show a yard of heavy woolen or cotton yarn? Furs are still intended for adornment and not for warmth, but wet snow, sleet and rain are most uncomfortable upon bare feminine chests.

If we could only have dry zero weather, it is said, the feminine wardrobe would bloom again in all its summertime glory.

$20,000 WORTH OF DRUGS SEIZED

Vancouver, Feb. 23.—Drugs, the wholesale value of which is estimated at $20,000, were seized by the police here last evening in the home of a Chinese, known as James J. Wing, or Chanchin. Letters were also found from Spokane, Seattle, Butte, Tacoma and Denver requesting shipments at prices varying from 37c to $80 an ounce. Diamonds, rings, watches and expensive furs, presumably bartered for drugs, were also discovered.

CANADIAN MINES

STAND TO PROFIT

Fine Opportunity to Dispose of Gold and Silver at Exceptional Prices.

Ottawa, Feb. 23.—Because approximately thirty million dollars' worth of unbacked notes are in circulation in the various countries of the world, the view is expressed here that for some years to come gold and silver mines in Canada will have an unexampled opportunity to dispose of their product at exceptionally high prices. There is not enough silver in the world to stand behind the unsupported paper based on silver, and no nation will be very eager to get as much as possible. This is believed to be the case with gold as well. China and India are draining this continent of supplies, as the shrewd Chinese and Indian merchants demand that their trade balances be settled not with paper but with the precious metals. As exchange cannot be expected to right itself while the currencies of the world are depreciated, the products of mines which a few years ago were not commercially workable propositions can now in many cases be mined and sold at a good profit.

The gold production in Canada for 1919 is valued at $16,276,000 as against $14,463,659 in 1918, and $15,272,992 in 1917. For the nine months ending December 31st last the export of Canadian gold totalled $3,384,253, as against $7,649,862 in 1918, and $11,197,749 in 1917. The bulk of this, $2,786,907, went to the United States, and in previous years practically all went to the United States. That there is great possibility of expansion by starting up mines now lying idle and developing promising properties seems to be indicated when one remembers that the production in 1900 was 1,800,057 fine ounces, valued at $27,203,353.

Product of Silver.
In the case of silver the production for 1919 was about 13,500,000 ounces, as against 21,533,379 fine ounces in 1918, valued at $20,583,704, and 22,221,274 in 1917 valued at $18,091,595. Prices have thus been increasing rapidly since 1917. It is interesting to note that with the present prices production may go up again, especially as China shows no end to her demand for silver. Of the silver produced in 1919 there has been exported to the United States 7,009,509 ounces valued at $5,567,520, as against 16,845,059 in 1918. To the United Kingdom there was sent 2,512,055 ounces valued at $2,512,055, and to Canada 1,387,000 ounces valued at $1,387,000 for December of 1918. China took $41,143 ounces, however, and the Orient will take the bulk of the British sales.

The total export of precious metals for the nine months ending December 31st was $14,302,470, as against $21,422,708 in 1918. It is interesting to note here that the Royal Mint in Ottawa has been running overtime for gold production. On Canadian exchange during the war it minted for the British treasury several million dollars' worth of South African gold to support sterling exchange there. When that sterling pound began to drop in value as measured by the American dollar, the treasury's million dollars' worth of gold sent to New York by the Canadian Department of Finance for the same purpose and other secret arrangements such as the South African gold do not appear in the trade returns.

A very pleasant evening was spent at the returned soldiers' club room Tuesday evening when about seventy-five ladies and gentlemen gave the boys a surprise party. Mrs. Charles Munroe was the leader of the scheme. R. M. Owen looked after the entertainment. After games and a programme of readings and music, refreshments were served. The boys are enjoying their comfortable room, which was rented for them by the citizens and furnished by the Women's Institute and Orange lodge. A lamp and table were given by private individuals.

True Knights of Faith

"Ha, it is the sign of the Wiltshire Stoutmen! And there beyond I see the red and silver of the Worlsey of Apuldercombe, who like myself are high my country's youth he. And as it is the molten cross of the gallant William Molyneux, and beside it the bloody chevrons of the Norfolk Woodhouse, with the annulets of the Musgrave of Westmoreland. By—St. Paul! it would be a very strange thing if no noble company were to gather without some notable deed of arms arising from it. And here is our boat, Sir Oliver, so it seems best to me that we should go to the abbey with our equires, leaving Master Hawtayne to have his own way in the unloading."

The horses of both knights and squires were speedily lowered into a broad lighter, and reached the shore almost as soon as their masters. Sir Nigel bent his knee devoutly as he put foot on land, and taking a small black patch from his bosom he bount it tightly over his left eye.

"My blessed George and the memory of my sweet lady-love have high my country's youth he. And as it is the molten cross of the gallant William Molyneux, and beside it the bloody chevrons of the Norfolk Woodhouse, with the annulets of the Musgrave of Westmoreland. By—St. Paul! it would be a very strange thing if no noble company were to gather without some notable deed of arms arising from it. And here is our boat, Sir Oliver, so it seems best to me that we should go to the abbey with our equires, leaving Master Hawtayne to have his own way in the unloading."

"In truth, you take me back twenty years, Sir Nigel," quoth Sir Oliver, as they mounted and rode slowly through the water-gate. "Alas, I cannot deny that the French thought that we were an army of the blind, for there was scarce a man who had not closed his eyes the greater love and honour of his lady. Yet it goes hard with you that you should darken one side, when with both open you can scarce tell a horse from a mule. In truth, I think that you step over the line of reason in this matter."

"Sir Oliver Buttershorn," said the little knight shortly, "I would have you to understand that, blind as I am, I can yet see the path of honor very clearly, and that that is the road upon which I do not crave another man's guidance."

"By my soul," said Sir Oliver, "you are as fit as verjuice this morning! If you are bent upon a quarrel with me I must leave you to your humor and drop into the 'Tete d'Or,' here, I gashed a smoking dish, which hid, methought a most excellent smell."

"Nenny, nenny," cried his comrade, laying his hand upon his knee, "we have known each other over long to fall out, Oliver, like two raw pages at their first reprieve. You must come with me first to the prince, and then back to the hotel; though sure I am that it would grieve his heart that any gentle cavalier should turn from him to board to a common tavern. But is not that my Lord D-lewar who waves to us? Ha, my fair lord, God and Our Lady be with you! And here is Sir Robert Cheney. Good-morrow, Robert! I am right glad to see you."

The two knights walked their horses abreast, with Alleyne and Ford, with John Northbury, who was squire to Sir Oliver, kept some paces behind them, a spear-length in front of Black Simon and the Winchester gold-bearer. Northbury, a lean, silent man, had been to those parts before, and at his horse with a gird neck; but the two young squires gazed eagerly to right or left, and plucked each other's sleeves to call attention to the many strange things on every side of them.

"See to the brave stalls!" cried Alleyne. "See to the noble armor set forth, and the noble trifles and shew to where the scrivener sits with the pigments and the ink-horns, and the rolls of sheepskin as white as the Dean of Ely's property! Saw man ever the like before?"

"Nay, man, there are finer stalls in Chetiv Ho," answered Ford, whose father had taken him to London on occasion of one of the Smithfield fairs. "I have seen a silversmith's booth there which would serve to buy the Dean of Ely's property! Saw man ever the like before?"

"And the churches!" cried Alleyne. "The Priory at Christchurch was a noble pile, but it was cold and bare, methinks, by one of these, with their frottings, and their carvings, and
