thing startling had not occurred a day or two since. John was at home with his family when the postman came to the door and delivered a letter. It was post-marked St. Louis. It was torn open with tremulous fingers, and to their great joy it was found to be from their long lost relative in answer to the letter which John had forwarded in obedience to his dream. In a large city like St. Louis it would seem that a letter lacking specific direction might not reach its destination, but of course the chances are that it would go straight to the mark, as it did in this case. It appeared by the letter that the St.
Louis German had been as much in the fog as to his sister's and Eiswirth's whearabouts as they had been in regard to him. The St. Louis man writes that he shall soon come to this city on a visit, and his Hartford friends are delighted at the prospect of a happy reunion. When he does come John proposes that what he dreamed about the lager shall also become a reality.
