A Reconstructed Life.

By RUTH CAMERON.

"Or watch the things you gave your life to broken. And stoop and build 'em up again with worn-out tools."

Some day I'd like to write a book on heroes and heroines. I have known. To be sure, Jack Binns of wireless fame, and Captain Barker of North Pole fame, are the only two heroes in the common sense of the word that I have met, but that isn't the kind I mean.

I mean the heroes and heroines of a seven-routine day-in-the-week existence, the countless folks who face life instead of facing death.

A Million Pin Pricks Or One Shell.

I wonder which takes the more intrepid spirit to face: a million pin pricks, or one shell from a cannon?

No, I on second thoughts, I don't wonder.

And when I write this book, among its characters will be the family who built over their life.

To lose an only son, a man in the full prime of young manhood, honored, respected and loved by the whole community, is an earthquake of the heart and soul.

I know there must be some who read who have undergone such a loss, and I know that no matter how old the wound it will ache at these words.

Suppose You Lost Two Such Sons

But listen! Suppose you had lost two such sons, suppose they were all the boys you had, and suppose you lost them both in one day by a needless tragedy!

Do you think you could go on living after that?

Do you think you could deliberately leave the old home which suggested sorrow so poignantly and build the new home you had planned with the lost ones, believing that they were watching you and would be glad? Do you think you could learn to smile again, could teach yourself to take a genuine interest in the doings of the day, could make yourself a cherished friend of both old and young, and your home a pleasant, peaceful place to which people liked to come to lose their weariness and unrest? Do you think you could be always remembering to do kind things for everyone?

In short, do you think you could reconstruct a beautiful, and in its way, a peacefully happy life on such ruins?

Don't You Think They Deserve a Carnegie Medal.

And if you did all that, don't you think you would deserve to be enrolled among the heroes whose courage in facing life is full as great as the courage that faces death?

I do.

And if I were a man I think I should feel like taking off my hat whenever I passed that home.

It is not that they have forgotten, or tried to forget. Far from it. It is because they always remember and love and hope. It is because they have always seen the star shine through their cypress trees that they have had the courage and faith to reconstruct a life.

Questions and Answers.

Do you believe in permitting children to have pets?—R. A. J.

Reply.—Certainly. Just think of the happiness and pride a child gets out of the ownership of a cat or dog or rabbit. The boy who grows up petless is a pathetic creature. A U. S. Court Seize 35 Teuton Ships.

Boston, Mass., June 5.—That the United States, in the event of war with the Kaiser, would find itself in a position to seize $100,000,000 worth of German and Austrian steamers is shown by the list of vessels interned in American ports.

These ships include the flower of German's transatlantic liners, the floating hotels that a year ago were carrying the cream of European traffic. A dozen of them are first-class passenger liners, and all, except a few of Austrian register, are in comparatively good condition.

Many estimates place the value of Austro-German ships lying in our ports at well over $100,000,000, but conservative steamship men consider the latter figure approximately correct.

The finest of the interned ships are tied up in the ports of New York and Boston.

The Vaterland of the Hamburg-American Line, the largest vessel in the world, is lying at the Hamburg-American docks in Hoboken, N.J., having made only 2½ trips across the Atlantic. She was on her second visit to this country when the war interrupted her career. This giant of the seas heads the list of marine war prizes to which Uncle Sam might fall heir. She is 950 feet long, registers 50,000 tons and is valued by her owners at $12,000,000.

Vaterland in Good Condition.

According to one of the crew, the Vaterland has been burning 50 tons of coal a day during the time she has been interned and is in fine condition, notwithstanding her long period of idleness. It has been estimated that the Vaterland could carry 10,000 troops.

At this port there is the Kronprinzessin Cecilie, queen of the North German Lloyd fleet. The Cecilie probably was the most popular German liner among American tourists. Her chief asset is speed. She established a new transatlantic record for German ships. She is capable of doing 24 knots. Her cabins, well known to Boston society, are as luxurious as those of the Olympic.

According to a North German Lloyd officer the Cecilie is in excellent condition and could be put into service almost immediately. Her owners value the ship at more than $5,000,000.

The Kaiser Wilhelm II., now at the Lloyd dock in Hoboken, is a sister ship of the famous German express steamers. While not quite as fast as the Cecilie, the Kaiser was averaging better than 32 knots for the transatlantic voyage before she was held up. It has been reported that she was preparing to clear this port and become a sea raider.

Fourteen of One Line Tied Up.

The Hamburg-American Line has 14 vessels interned, the Amerika and the Cincinnati here, and 12 in New York. Next to the Vaterland the Amerika and Cincinnati are the most valuable, the rest of the fleet being first and second-class passenger carriers. Among the freighters are some of the greatest cargo carriers in the world.

The North German Lloyd has six liners in American ports, all but one of them having been used recently as first-class passenger ships.

Tied up at Hoboken piers with the Kaiser Wilhelm II., are the following ships:

Frederick der Grosse, Konig Wilhelm II., the Prinzessin Irene and the Grosser Kurfurst.

There are also four Austro-American Line vessels at New York, two of them having been engaged in passenger traffic between New York and Trieste before hostilities began.

The total number of interned vessels in the port of New York include four Austrian and 26 German steamers and one German motor ship, three German ships and one German bark.

In Milady's Boudoir.

KEEPING SWEET INSIDE.

It isn't enough to keep clean externally and all the bathing and powdering in the world will not make Milady charming if she is not sweet in mind. Kindness shines from the eyes and lips. It is the most thorough of beautifiers for it carries behind it a sweet thought which emanates from a kind heart.

The woman who is unkind to children, old people and animals carries the expression of sin in her face devoid of any form of beauty. What tumults she must have to meet when she finds herself alone with her conscience. She herself is the sufferer far more than the unfortunate ones she has repelled by her expression. Kindness and sweetness may be cultivated by the feeling that we, ourselves, are at fault many times.

Milady, who flares into a temper with her maid, loses the maid's respect, as well as aging herself considerably. The calm, serene nature that is difficult to ruffle, regains the youthful lines long after Father Time has touched the owner with his grim hands. When there is so much to be gained by sweetness, and so little to be accomplished by a display of temper, what argument can possibly make losing your temper any profit.

Everyday Etiquette

"Please tell me how long a guest should remain after a dinner?" asked troubled Jane.

"It is never polite or kind for the hostess or a guest to hurry away to meet another engagement before the last course has been served. If a guest spends an hour or so with her hostess after dinner, she cannot be adversely criticized," said her aunt.

LONDON

LONDON, May 25th, 1915.

THE KING AND RACING.

The King, I am told, has caused instructions to be sent to his racing trainer at Newmarket that no one employed about his stables should be discharged in consequence of the arrangement concerning the discontinuance of racing. Some time ago His Majesty placed every facility in the way of those employed with the racing stud to join the army if they were suitable, and then promised that their places should be kept open for them and their wages paid to those dependent upon them while they were away; and this offer is now repeated. It is expected that His Majesty's lead in this direction will be very generally followed, especially by the larger owners; but with a racing puleury end put to horse-racing, the remainder of the year, many of the smaller owners will be compelled to break up their studs owing to their inability to bear the expense of maintaining their stables in idleness.

THE SECRET DEPARTURES.

Now that Lord Kitchener has again appealed for men a decructing of efforts on a big scale are being renewed. It is to be hoped that something of a more rousing character will be sanctioned than anything that has been yet permitted. Recruiting battalions and soldiers themselves have been their best, but the difficulty is to create a central interest which will bring crowds of people together with the one thought in their mind. There are two ways to create this central interest, but although they have been repeatedly urged upon the authorities nothing has been done. The first plan is to let the people see our soldiers when they are going away, and let them give them a send-off; and the second is to make a display of the trophies they have captured. There was certainly good reason why the troops should go away in secret in the first half of the war, but is there any real reason now why this should be so tightly maintained?
