The Broken Circle!

CHAPTER LV.

"You have made an impression!" laughed Lord Stanhope to his friend. "I never saw that look in Ada Craythorne's eyes before."

Sir Charles shrugged his shoulders and smiled.

"She must have suffered for years," said Dr. Griffiths, but he did not add that the disease had been aggravated by some terrible shock. He respected the secret that he had kept so well.

The duchess would not allow anything to be touched in the room until the general and Sir Basil came. The unfinished letter lay upon the table, and the broken wedding-ring was in the folded paper.

They had telegraphed at once for Sir Arthur and Sir Basil. Fast as steam could carry them, they went to Mentone, and found the terrible news true that Leah was dead.

"All the calm, imperial beauty of her youth came back to her as she lay sleeping after her long fever and pain. There was no path on the beautiful face; the thick, dark eyelashes lay like fringe on the white cheeks; there was a strange beauty on the marble brow; and the proud curves of the perfect lips were set in a smile. The duchess had covered the couch on which she lay with lovely white blossoms; and so Sir Basil, who had parted from her on board the steamer, saw her again. He kissed the pale lips that had murmured so many loving words to him, weeping like a child, and regretting that he had loved her more."

The duchess gave him the letter and the ring. He received them in silence. What had he to say?

But that night, when all was still, he crept back to the room, and laid the two halves of the broken wedding ring on the cold, white breast. No one else should ever wear it; it was buried with her.

Early the next morning he went out and procured some scarlet passion-flowers. Sir Arthur liked him all the better because he cried like a child when he placed them in the dead, white hands. One could have fancied that a smile passed over the dead face. Her secret was safe for ever now, and no one knew why she had died. No suspicion of the truth came to any one of them.

So they mourned her, and no sting of bitter memories increased their pain. Hettie and the general learned to love each other in the midst of their trouble more than they would ever have done in prosperity. They mourned long and sincerely for Leah. The general for a long time was quite unlike himself—he seemed unable to recover from the blow; and there were times when every one thought that Hettie must follow her sister.

There was a great outburst of sorrow in England when the papers told that Leah, the beloved niece of General Sir Arthur Hattson, had died suddenly at Mentone, of heart-disease.

English visitors go now to see her grave; none leave it without tears. They tell each other how soon she was to have been married to some one whom she loved dearly, and how she was writing to her lover when the summons came. Leah's grave is the most beautiful in the cemetery. A tall white marble cross bears her name, and masses of superb scarlet passion-flowers creep up it and overhang the grave.

CHAPTER III.

"Is that your paragon?" he asked. "She is certainly a very handsome, vivacious girl, but not at all my style."

"My paragon!" ejaculated Lord Cecil. "Not a bit of it. Ah, here she comes!"

The young peer's good-looking face suddenly became aglow with pleasure; then he uttered a sharp exclamation:

"By Jove! Is that the earl? It is!" He ran forward and pushed his way through the throng that had gathered about Lord Howard, and was soon heartily shaking the earl's right hand. It was a surprise to everybody, and while he explained why he had returned home so unexpectedly, Lady Gladys clung lovingly to his arm, blushing and smiling, and looking lovelier than she had ever looked before.

This was how Sir Charles Hastings first beheld her, and he never forgot the entrancing vision, or the strange sensation that tingled through every nerve. Then he heard a resounding cheer for Lord Howard, but did not know until afterward what it meant. The earl was surrounded by old friends and neighbors, and Lady Gladys and Lady Marcella followed the burly form of Lord Cecil Stanhope through the crowd.

"Hi! There you are, Hastings! I want to introduce you to Lady Marcella Howard, and her niece, Lady Gladys. The earl is too busy for a while. This is a glorious surprise."

Sir Charles stood with bared head before the ladies, while Cecil introduced him, and when his gray eyes met the blue eyes of Lady Gladys he mumbled words which had no meaning. This man of the world was bewildered by the saintly beauty of the young girl before him.

"I think I know your father," said Lady Marcella, graciously. "He was one of the Hastings of Pembroke."

"Yes," replied the baronet, a shadow flitting over his face; "I am glad to hear that you met him."

He glanced again at Lady Gladys, and saw that she was regarding him earnestly. Her eyes dropped, and both were a little confused. Lord Cecil came to their relief and chatted away merrily; then he escorted Gladys and her aunt to the ladies' pavilion.

"What do you think of the earl's daughter?" he demanded of Sir Charles a few minutes later, his blue eyes dancing. "Is she not lovely? And yet so simple, and good, and ingenious. I am desperately in love with her, and I think that she likes me, for I am the only fellow she will have about her."

"Have you spoken of love to her?" Sir Charles asked, a dull pain at his heart. "She is very young yet."

"No, but I think that she takes it for granted," the young peer went on. "I have told her aunt, Lady Marcella, and shall speak to Lord Howard by and by. I am jolly glad he has come home again. Nothing could have been settled without his sanction, you know."

He rattled on, but Sir Charles only caught a word now and then. His thoughts were full of Lady Gladys. Her name was written on the tablets of his heart. Her eyes had looked into his soul. Her face was everywhere before him. He had quite forgotten his promise to Miss Ada Craythorne.

Somebody claimed Lord Cecil's attention, and Sir Charles wandered away, glad to be alone. He had heard Lady Marcella say that their stall was Number Four, and he found that Number Four was very tastefully arrayed with the choicest products of both garden and greenhouse. He wandered on a little farther, and passed the Craythornes' stall without even looking at it, much to the mortification of Miss Ada, at least, for the girls were just preparing for business, and dispensing their sweetest smiles, much to the bewilderment of several country swains.

Fashion Plates.

3518-3908. Just to prove that Fashion is not all a thing of straight lines and "slip on" styles comes this attractive gown, with its broad vest and "apron" drape. This is a very unique model and one that may be developed in any of the materials now in vogue. Found in one of the new patterns is here combined with crepe. One could have this design in gingham and organdy, or in plain and figured voiles.

The Waist Pattern 3518 is cut in 7 Sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46 inches bust measure. The Skirt Pattern 3908 is cut in 6 Sizes: 25, 27, 29, 31, 33 and 35 inches waist measure. To make this style for a medium size and of one material will require 6 3/4 yards of 40 inches wide. As illustrated vest, collar, cuffs and drapery will require 2 1/2 yards. The width of the skirt at the foot is about 2 1/2 yards.

TWO separate patterns mailed to any address on receipt of 15c. FOR EACH pattern in silver or stamps.

A GOOD SCHOOL DRESS.

3514. The smart collar and long waist effect makes this design very becoming to growing girls. It will develop well in chambray with plaid or check gingham for collar and cuffs, or in serge, or gabardine if a warmer dress is desired.
The Pattern is cut in 4 Sizes: 6, 8, 10 and 12 years. A 16 year size requires 4 yards of 32 inch material.
Pattern mailed to any address on receipt of 15c. in silver or stamps.
