BUT DO YOU, REALLY?

Do you know when you are having a good time? That sounds like a foolish question number 963. But here's 964. Do you, really?

A neighbor of mine who has his work so arranged that he works mornings and evenings but has his afternoons free, took up golf last year. He was very much interested in it at first and got into the habit of playing every afternoon except over the week-end when the links were crowded.

Last week on a lovely fall day, I was surprised to see him putting around his backyard at an hour when he is usually on the links.

I inquired "how come, and he laughed. At himself, as was presently proved.

A Flashlight Experience.

"Well, you know yesterday afternoon it looked like rain along about noon," he said, "and then it looked as if it were going to clear up, and say, all of a sudden, I caught myself hoping it would rain, so I wouldn't have to go over and play golf. You see I kind of got stale on the game without realizing it. But that was like a flashlight on the way I really felt. I'm going to do something else for awhile now until I find myself really wanting to have a game of golf again."

I wonder how often a flashlight experience like that would reveal to us that we are bored with things we think we like.

Are't You Sometimes Bored?
Bored with dashing around the country seeking some new place to eat and dance.

Bored with the social functions that after all the work and the money that have been put into them bring us less joy than a simple informal meeting of real friends.

Bored with some of the games we play not because we really have a taste for games but just because everyone else is playing them.

Bored with the long auto ride that we take, not because we shall see any new scenery or because there is any where we really want to go, but just because we have the instinct to keep moving. I think, by the way, there are women to whom motion in an automobile takes the place that rocking in a chair used to fill. Can that be why rocking chairs have largely disappeared—because their function has been usurped by the auto?

He Knows When He's Bored.

I have a friend who has a little boy of seven. One day when I was visiting her we were going on an auto trip and I deplored the fact that there would be no room for Bobby.

"Don't worry about Bobby," said she. "He's having a good time with the boys and he knows that an auto ride bores him after the first few minutes. He knows when he's enjoying himself and when he's bored, and he refuses to be bored if he can help it."

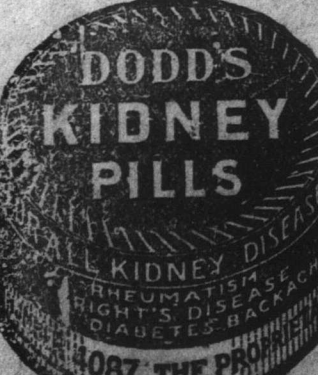

Lucky Bobby, if he keeps a firm hold on that knowledge all his life. Of course sometimes one has to submit to being bored as a concession to social conditions and to the desires of others. But I suspect we don't have to half as often as we think we do.

Death of a Woman Pioneer

WINNIPEG, Oct. 25.—(Canadian Press)—Closing a life which had been closely related with the historic pioneer development of Winnipeg, Manitoba, and the west, Mrs. Mary Wood, wife of John Wood, 76 years old, daughter of a British soldier serving with the Hudson's Bay Company, born in the district which is now the city of Winnipeg in 1848, died at Manitogogan recently.

Captured with her first husband, Roland Price Meade, a member of the staff of the "Northwest," whom she married at the old Red River settlement, Mrs. Wood was held prisoner by Louis Riel in the first rebellion. Later the couple made their escape with Governor Schultz to Fort Alexander on Lake Winnipeg, returning afterwards with the military expedition to Port Garry. Mr. Meade died and she married John Wood and settled in Manitogogan in the early eighties, residing there until the time of her death. Mrs. Wood is survived by five sons, three daughters and over 50 grand and great-grandchildren, many of whom attended her funeral.

South Dakota WILL DEDICATE ITS FIRST SPAN OVER MISSOURI.

MOBRIDGE, S.D., Nov. 2 (A.P.)—All South Dakota will face toward this city in tribute November 12 when in the presence of a large official gathering the state will dedicate the first of a history-making series of five bridges over the Missouri river. The entire quintet of structures, is scheduled for completion by the close of next year—just two years after the start.

The bridges will redeem the western half of the state from a condition of practical isolation during a large part of the year. Heretofore there has not been a single highway bridge across the Missouri river over its course through the state.

Enthusiasm for the project brought rapid construction far surpassing original plans. The first step was taken in 1921 when a one mill bridge tax was levied "for bridge construction and maintenance." Two years later the project assumed definite form when proceeds of the one mill tax were diverted into a special fund to build five bridges.

Then, instead of waiting for the fund to accumulate, counties and cities over the state took advantage of a legislative provision and by issuing bonds and warrants subscribed amounts sufficient to place the whole project under way as rapidly as the plans could be formed and contracts let.

The bridges have a combined length of more than a mile and a half, and will contain a total of 26 spans and 31 piers, the deepest of which was sunk into bed rock 60 feet beneath the surface of the water.

The sleeveless, straight dinner or dance frock is apt to end at the bottom in a French puff.

Wedding Bells

MOORE-FROST.

The C. of E. Cathedral was the scene of a very pretty wedding on Tuesday Nov. 4th, when Miss Dorothy Louise, second daughter of Mrs. Janet Moore, was united in matrimony to Mr. John Albert Victor Frost, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Frost of this city. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. Brinton. The bride entered the church leaning on the arm of her brother Mr. Harold Moore, and wore a dress of crepe-de-metor, with black picture hat and carried a bouquet of chrysanthemums and asparagus fern. The bridesmaids Miss Evelyn Moore, sister of the bride and Miss Marjorie Frost, sister of the groom were attired in dresses of blue tulle with black picture hats. The groom was attended by Mr. John Burridge. After the nuptial knot was tied, the party motored to the home of the bride's parents, 18 Waldgrave Street, where refreshments were served, after which they left for Topsail to entrain for Heart's Content where the honeymoon will be spent. The grooms presents to the bridesmaids were ear rings and birthstone rings to the bridesmaid, gold cuff links. The bride and groom were the recipient of many valuable presents which shows the esteem in which they were held by their friends. The friends of Mr. and Mrs. Frost wish them every happiness over the sea of matrimony.

HAWARD-SHEPPARD.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at Holy Trinity Church on Sunday afternoon the 2nd, inst. when Miss Olive Blanche Hayward, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Hayward was united in the Holy Bonds of Matrimony to Mr. John McFarlane Sheppard third son of Mr. and Mrs. Eldred Sheppard. The bride was very attractively attired in a handsome dress of white satin with overlace, and wore the customary white veil, and carried a beautiful bouquet of white carnations and asparagus fern. She was given away by her father, and was attended by her sister Miss Jean, who looked charming in a dress of tangerine crepe de chene with hat to match. The groom was assisted by his brother-in-law Mr. Nelson Hayward. The ceremony was performed by Rev. M. K. Gardner, Rural Dean, and the church was filled to capacity, the whole town turning out for the occasion. At the conclusion of the ceremony the party motored to the home of the bride's parents where the wedding supper was served and the customary bride and groom honours. At 11:30 p.m. the newly wedded couple took the express for St. John's where the honeymoon will be spent, and on the 7th will reside on Beaumont Avenue.

Creator of Venus De Milo

BALKED AT GIVING HER ARMS.

PARIS, Oct. 25.—(A.P.)—It may be some consolation to art lovers throughout the world, who have wondered in what position were the missing arms of the famous Venus de Milo statue in the Louvre, to learn that even the ancients themselves were perplexed on this point.

Dr. Edde, a French physician, has just made known that during a recent visit to Egypt he came into possession of a small bronze statuette of the same period as the Venus de Milo. This statuette is an exact copy of the famous Venus, and like the original, it has no arms. Dr. Edde therefore concludes that the Venus de Milo never at any time had arms, and he believes that the sculptor, when he had carved out of the stone such a divine form, gave up all idea of adding arms.

When the Venus de Milo was discovered on the island of Milo a large reward was offered to anyone who could find the arms, but in spite of extensive search, nothing was discovered.

Tactful and Taxless

The task of being an ambassador is a very pleasant one indeed. This representative possesses some remarkable privileges, and ranks immediately after the Royal princes of the country in which he is residing. It might almost be said that an ambassador, like the king, can do no wrong, for he stands above the law of the country in which he is officiating.

The courts have no power over him or his servants, and even a criminal, if he were known to be residing in an embassy, could not be arrested without the permission of the ambassador. Another interesting fact about an ambassador is that the ground on which his residence stands belongs to the country from which he comes.

We all grumble nowadays about the amount of taxation we have to pay. This is where the ambassador again scores. Ambassadors do not have to pay a single penny in taxes.

Late Governor Writes on Election Issues

In the London Times of October 21 appears the following letter written by Sir C. Alexander Harris, the late Governor of Newfoundland:—

A BOLD TASK FOR LIBERALISM.

To the Editor of the Times.

Sir—With diffidence I send you, on the chance that you may admit them to your columns, a few thoughts on a policy for which many sane minds are at the moment inarticulately calling.

When I returned to this country I had hopes of bearing a hand in establishing a great national party, of which the Liberal Party seems to form the proper nucleus. But the time, I fear, is not yet. Meanwhile certain propositions, which it is difficult to overstate, may usefully be impressed on the electorate.

Such success as the present Government have had (and in some directions it is material) is due to Liberal tradition and their absorption of a substantial section of the former Liberal Party. To the Liberals as a party is due practically the whole of the sound and progressive development in the life of our State. So far as reforms may be credited to Conservatives, these are the inevitable and logical result of a progress which makes the Conservatives of one generation the Liberals of the next. Based on immutable principles, true Liberalism cannot die. It holds dear all those legitimate aims which the so-called "Labour" Party cherishes, but it pursues them with due regard to the interests of all sections of the community, and seeks to adjust these scientifically.

Yet at the present time, through reasons largely personal, the Liberal Party is actually struggling for its life. It may, as Viscount Grey says, be time the Liberals had their chance, but not in the way indicated, and not as the party stands. By an act of self-renewal the two party rival leaders can indeed serve the State. They may fall of office, they may even be misunderstood; but they have both of them arrived at such a pinnacle in the past that they can afford to sacrifice further personal triumph to the enduring reputation of having done the big thing at a critical moment.

The letter you published from Sir Bryan Donkin, and the decision to avoid fights in some divisions, point in the right direction; but something bolder is required. Assuming, as seems probable, that the balance of parties is not greatly changed by the new election, then let the Liberals determine that to save the country from ill-considered measures (however generous in their intention) they will consistently support a Conservative Ministry. So in the long run they will come into their own. "Coalition," some will cry. Yes, but all parties are in themselves coalitions. How easily the politician is frightened by a bugaboo? Your obedient servant.

C. ALEXANDER HARRIS.

Jackie Coogan's Greatest Screen Triumph

OPENING AT THE NICKEL THEATRE ON MONDAY.

With more than $400,000 spent on the construction of the sets alone, Jackie Coogan's latest picture, "Long Live the King," his first under the $1,500,000 Metro contract which was given him recently, ought to fulfill all the advance reports which were broadcast throughout the country at the time this picture was in the making in Hollywood.

That it is an unusually lavish and beautiful production is substantiated by the fact that it contains several exact duplications of famous European structures. One is of the famous castle of Neuschwanstein in Bavaria, a landmark in European architecture, another of the world-renowned opera house at Dresden, Germany, and still another of the beautiful Cathedral in Hagenovna, the shrine of millions of European visitors. A special research staff sailed from Europe for Hollywood at the time production was begun with exact designs and plans for the duplication of these famous structures. "Long Live the King" is an adaptation of Mary Roberts Rinehart's famous novel of the same name. It was directed by Victor Schertzinger from the continuity by C. Gardner Sullivan and Eve Unsell and photographed by Frank Good and Robert Martin. William Van Brunt was research expert and J. I. Hughes art director. The picture was produced for Metro under the personal supervision of Jackie Coogan, Sr.

THE HOME OF GOOD SHOES.

High-priced hotels are crowded; there are theatre and opera openings almost nightly; various German commercial organizations are holding conventions and conferences; directors of various shipping companies are preparing for the extension of their activities and hotelmen have been encouraged to greater activity. Hotel lobbies are more brightly lighted and private dining rooms are again entertaining many parties. Berlin hotel keepers are especially jubilant over the dropping of the tax of 15 per cent, which the city has imposed on all foreigners occupying rooms in Berlin.

Berlin's leading hotels are taking on an especially international aspect, and celebrities from all parts of the world are again appearing here as in pre-war days. In the lobby of a single hotel Mrs. Katherine Tinsley, Gams Walska, Ossip Gabrilowitch, Isadora Duncan, Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Davis, H. M. Robinson, Leo Slezak, Gerhard Hauptmann, Max Reinhardt, Mascagni, Maria Gay, Julia Culp, Fritz Massary and a score of other persons known to newspaper readers the world over were recently to be seen.
