Girls are not the only creatures who put on airs, but horses, too, are in the swim with the fashions, and while some of them wear bonnets that are a trifle out of style, other members of the equine family appear as modernly adorned as though they could read the delineators of fashion. Not satisfied with the bare appearance of the ordinary straw lid that shields his horse's head from the burning sun, some teamsters keep the headgear neatly trimmed with a natty bouquet of artificial flowers. Others tie bows of gay-colored ribbon in the manes and tails of their animals. Of course, it is an old trick to friz the caudal appendage of old Dobbin, which gives a bushy appearance to the adarrance of the ordinary straw lid that shows the position of the switch.
