Murphy, for that matter, gave no exhibition of foolhardy boxing. He was scarcely as vehement as usual, but he made every point tell. It was a case of two men who had met before and who knew just what to watch for. There was no knockdown at any stage of the bout.

At the close of the seventeenth round Murphy's lightning hooks and uppercuts balanced Wolgast's body smashes. Wolgast was the weaker of the pair, and in the eighteenth during a desperate spell of infighting, Murphy split Wolgast's lip with an uppercut.

The gore flowed freely and Ad became weaker still. He tried hard to offset the lead Murphy gained, and failed. For one-half of the twentieth round Murphy held himself together and allowed Wolgast to fight himself out. Then Harlem Tommy began a blizzardly finish and was literally tearing Wolgast's head off when the gong signalled the end of the bout. JACK JOHNSON WILL
