gas and electric lighting of the whole city, private as well as public. It seems to us that they ask the corporation to under-take a work which it has proved itself altogether incompetent to perf rm. With the experience that the citizens have had of the competency of the city authorities to manage electric lights, it appears to us that it would have been more reasonable for the committee to have recommended that it would have been more reasonable for the committee to have recommended the corporation to give up the lighting business for a bad job, and to take mea-sures for placing the lighting of the city's streets and buildings in private hands. But there is really no such alternative be-fore the citizens. Let the Corporation confine its lighting operations to the streets, and let private enterprise look after the rest. The either real and is a sending the streets and it wants the lighting much better attended to than it has been hitherto.
