Questioned about the condition of the car the witness said that it was in good condition and was a 1917 model. He also said that there was no guard or railing along the side of the ditch, and the road at the point of the accident was as marrow as at the point where the hole had been encountered. He denied having told parties that he had looked back to speak to his wife and when he turned around again the car was going into the ditch. Defence Opens

George A. McCubbin, Ontario Land surveyor of Chatham testified head to hear some remark his wife had made from the back seat and when he turned his head back again one of the front wheels of the car was over the edge of the ditch, that such turning of the head did not constitute negligence on the part of the plaintiff.

Plaintiff's counsel also argued that the hole in the road into which the wheels of Wilson's car had dropped just before it turned over into the ditch was almost wholly responsible for the accident, and that the fatality might have been avoided had the road been constructed farther away from the ditch or had the latter been guarded by a substantial railing.

A. Weir, K.C., counsel for the defendant corporation contended that the hole in the road was not sufficient to cause the accident and that the road in question was reasonably safe for travel.

R. I. Towers, K.C., is conducting the pleadings for the plaintiffs on behalf of Meredith and Fisher, and A. Weir, K.C., is acting for the defendant corporation.

After hearing the arguments of the respective counsel, Justice Sutherland reserved judgment.
