

ments, let the responsibility rest where it belongs. Our work begins with students after they have passed through these branches and enter upon higher studies, and it goes without saying that the more thorough the culture in all that is elementary and preparatory the greater our pleasure and success.

Finally, the results thus far achieved in our brief history are such as should inspire us with thankfulness and courage. But we cannot stand still. We must go forward. With such a record as God has enabled us already to make, with our large band of alumni, heartily loyal to the truth and to their Alma Mater, and with new friends and benefactors arising throughout our great country, why should not the College advance to more complete equipment and greater eminence?
