

I can assure you, gentlemen, that the Canadian Government will continue to do everything within its power to foster still further this public support for the Organization. We believe that as long as the Organization rests on the faith and the conviction of the 300 million people who constitute the Atlantic community, NATO will be able to play the effective and constructive role which you and I expect from it, not only for collective military defence, but in the maintenance of international peace and security, and the solution of the problems that now divide the world.
