

INTRODUCTION

In May 1973 the United States Commission on International Security in the name of Congress, the 923rd House Report, directed its attention to the operations of our departments and agencies in the area of this program.

The original purpose of the Commission was to review the work of the State Department in the area of international security and the work of the other departments and agencies in the area of international security. The Commission was to report to the President and the Congress on the work of the State Department in the area of international security and the work of the other departments and agencies in the area of international security.

The Commission was to report to the President and the Congress on the work of the State Department in the area of international security and the work of the other departments and agencies in the area of international security.

The Commission was to report to the President and the Congress on the work of the State Department in the area of international security and the work of the other departments and agencies in the area of international security.

The Commission was to report to the President and the Congress on the work of the State Department in the area of international security and the work of the other departments and agencies in the area of international security.

The Commission was to report to the President and the Congress on the work of the State Department in the area of international security and the work of the other departments and agencies in the area of international security.

The Commission was to report to the President and the Congress on the work of the State Department in the area of international security and the work of the other departments and agencies in the area of international security.

The Commission was to report to the President and the Congress on the work of the State Department in the area of international security and the work of the other departments and agencies in the area of international security.