

The chateau is a large stone building, with a commodious spot as a court yard, or place of parade in front towards the town. Joined to this, is a large dining or banquetting hall: On the summit of an inaccessible precipice in front from this house and its gardens, we view the country east, and south across the river, and the whole of the lower town.

The most remarkable building in Quebec, is the Cathedral church, which is large, and attended by a numerous congregation. It is well adorned at the east end near the altar, but doth not make the same splendid appearance, with the parish church of Montreal.

The seminary and former college of the Jesuits are large. Elegant chapels are joined to each of them. The Recolletts college and chapel have been demolished by fire, and are in ruins. The nunneries are also large: One is a place of female education, the other is an hospital: A third is without the city, and an hospital. These institutions, the property of females,—the receptacle for the sick and wounded, are conducted with great order and economy. Human woes are alleviated by them in a manner, that does honor to human nature and religion. They contain large