

ROWAT'S SPECIAL COFFEE
The finest procurable. It pleases most particular people.
70c a pound.
T. A. ROWAT & CO.
250 Dundas Street. Phone 3051-3055.

DOLLAR WINDOW

Any article in our north window will be sold for $1 Each
C. H. Ward & Co
Diamond Merchants and Jewelers.
386 RICHMOND STREET

Magic Discs

Every Edison RE-CREATION is a Magic Disc. Indeed, it is more than magic—for it is an actual reproduction of a human voice or an instrumentalist or group of instrumentalists' playing.

These magic discs, when played upon

The NEW EDISON
"The Phonograph with a Soul"

cannot be told from the artist's original performance.

The voices of great Metropolitan stars cannot be told from Edison's RE-CREATION of them when heard in direct comparison.

You would imagine from this, that owing to the perfection of the NEW EDISON, it will be exceedingly expensive and quite beyond the reach of the average person. But it is quite the opposite. The NEW EDISON is within the reach of any pocket-book. There is a model at $14.00.

Call and hear the NEW EDISON

Wm. McPhillips

The Music Centre.

238 Dundas Street, London.

Anthracite Coal

Egg, Stove, Chestnut, Pea.

—Best Quality—

Wood! Wood!

Hard Wood, Mixed Wood, Mixed Slabs

Prompt deliveries, any part of city.

BRISTOL ESSERY

630 Maitland. ywt Phone 1089

PHONE 3511.

HAVE YOUR PIANO TUNED

BY

S. BOARDMAN

Formerly six years with Heintzman Co. ywt

He Is Letting His Education Profit Upon His Eyesight

The student with weak eyes pays an enormous price unless his vision is reinforced with the right kind of spectacles. The price eventually may be the loss of his sight.

Let us fit your son with comfort-giving, becoming, up-to-date glasses and relieve him of that costly strain upon his eyes.

Carlyle TREBILCOCK OPTICIAN

233 Dundas Street. Phone 2351.

Two Doors East of Majestic. ywt

Red Bird Bicycles ARE GOOD BICYCLES

MADE IN CANADA. ywt

Double Mileage

Puncture-Proof Service. Ask

ART WILKES

London Tire Repair Depot.

354 Wellington. Opp. McClellan's. ywt

INSURANCE

HAROLD J. LAWSON

(Returned).

305 Dominion Savings Bldg. Phone 550. ywt

London Loan and Savings Co.

OF CANADA

4% ALLOWED ON DEPOSITS.

5 1/2% ALLOWED ON DEBENTURES.

220 Dundas Street, London, Ont.

63rd Anniversary FUR SALE

Beltz & Co.

Practical Furriers. ywt

NATURE'S

Most Nourishing Foods

plus

PARNELL'S

'SCIENTIFIC BAKING

results in the ideal bread for young and old.

TRY IT TODAY!

The Policy of Our Mail Order Dept.---

From time to time through our advertisements in the different papers of London and vicinity we will offer special values on certain articles of our stock. Each article that is thus featured will be of special value, and will warrant your serious consideration. Our policy toward mail order customers is just this—every place advertised is exactly as described and illustrated.

We guarantee that any article you purchase will give the satisfaction that you have a right to expect, and that it represents the full value of the price you pay for it.

However, if for any reason you are dissatisfied with the purchase you may return the article to us at our expense and we will exchange it for something else or refund your money. Whatever happens, we undertake to see that you have no reason to regret your business transactions with us.

YOUNG'S

London's Jewellers

London East London

Give your children food that is nourishing!

Well balanced and easy to digest. In short, give them

JOHNSTON BROS.

XXX BREAD

Recognized all over Western Ontario for its deliciously different flavor and satisfying qualities.

Fresh at your grocer's today.

Johnson Bros. Phone 944. ywt

The Story Our Windows Tell!

A peep in our windows today will tell you what's new in foot-wear this spring.

The most exclusive styles from the world's best makers now on display.

Cook's Shoe Store

If your advertising doesn't carry conviction, save your money. If you can't get conviction in it, bring it to us.

Federal Advertising Agency

T. H. YULL,

Dominion Savings Building,

London, Canada,

Mechanical Photo Retouching.

At The Theaters

AT THE GRAND.

Lottie May and her four bathing girls are the headline attraction in a well-balanced vaudeville bill at the Grand Opera House, and, coupled with a feature photoplay, "It Pays to Advertise," with that ever-popular story, "The Belle of Binglewie," make an altogether enjoyable entertainment. The bill will be presented today and tomorrow, and should attract good houses.

As before mentioned, Miss May and her bathing girls were the star act. Their diving stunts were excellent, and deserved all the applause they received and more.

Fred Whitfield and Marie Ireland put on a laughable little skit entitled "The Belle of Binglewie." They put their jokes over with a zip and dash, while the setting alone gets many laughs before the pair appear.

Will Halliday and Curly Jones present the battle of "Whatehouse" in regulation style. They, too, have a fine collection of laugh-producers which pleased the large audience immensely.

Josephine Lennard is a winsome little comedienne, and made a hit with the audience from her first song right through her repertoire. She is also a fine little dancer.

Kartell, a slack wire artist, is an artist in every sense of the word. He is also a juggler of some note. His performance last night was creditable to the extreme.

Mr. Washburn, skilful farce actor that he is, renders what is probably the cleverest performance of his entire career before the camera as the optimistic Rodney in "It Pays to Advertise." He is supported by a cast of unusual merit, headed by Lois Williams, a very good comedienne, and the recent Washburn picture, "Why Smith Left Home," has the prominent role of Ambrose Peale, which he handles with a sincerity and enthusiasm which scores every point of comedy. Frank Currier, the veteran character of the screen, is cast as Cyrus Martin, the wealthy soap manufacturer. His scenes with his son, particularly after he has figured out the tremendous cost of the prodigal's college career, and then endeavors to induce him to go to work, are rarely played, and show the extreme.

Josephine Lennard is a winsome little comedienne, and made a hit with the audience from her first song right through her repertoire. She is also a fine little dancer.

Kartell, a slack wire artist, is an artist in every sense of the word. He is also a juggler of some note. His performance last night was creditable to the extreme.

Mr. Washburn, skilful farce actor that he is, renders what is probably the cleverest performance of his entire career before the camera as the optimistic Rodney in "It Pays to Advertise." He is supported by a cast of unusual merit, headed by Lois Williams, a very good comedienne, and the recent Washburn picture, "Why Smith Left Home," has the prominent role of Ambrose Peale, which he handles with a sincerity and enthusiasm which scores every point of comedy. Frank Currier, the veteran character of the screen, is cast as Cyrus Martin, the wealthy soap manufacturer. His scenes with his son, particularly after he has figured out the tremendous cost of the prodigal's college career, and then endeavors to induce him to go to work, are rarely played, and show the extreme.

Josephine Lennard is a winsome little comedienne, and made a hit with the audience from her first song right through her repertoire. She is also a fine little dancer.

Kartell, a slack wire artist, is an artist in every sense of the word. He is also a juggler of some note. His performance last night was creditable to the extreme.

Mr. Washburn, skilful farce actor that he is, renders what is probably the cleverest performance of his entire career before the camera as the optimistic Rodney in "It Pays to Advertise." He is supported by a cast of unusual merit, headed by Lois Williams, a very good comedienne, and the recent Washburn picture, "Why Smith Left Home," has the prominent role of Ambrose Peale, which he handles with a sincerity and enthusiasm which scores every point of comedy. Frank Currier, the veteran character of the screen, is cast as Cyrus Martin, the wealthy soap manufacturer. His scenes with his son, particularly after he has figured out the tremendous cost of the prodigal's college career, and then endeavors to induce him to go to work, are rarely played, and show the extreme.

Josephine Lennard is a winsome little comedienne, and made a hit with the audience from her first song right through her repertoire. She is also a fine little dancer.

Kartell, a slack wire artist, is an artist in every sense of the word. He is also a juggler of some note. His performance last night was creditable to the extreme.

Mr. Washburn, skilful farce actor that he is, renders what is probably the cleverest performance of his entire career before the camera as the optimistic Rodney in "It Pays to Advertise." He is supported by a cast of unusual merit, headed by Lois Williams, a very good comedienne, and the recent Washburn picture, "Why Smith Left Home," has the prominent role of Ambrose Peale, which he handles with a sincerity and enthusiasm which scores every point of comedy. Frank Currier, the veteran character of the screen, is cast as Cyrus Martin, the wealthy soap manufacturer. His scenes with his son, particularly after he has figured out the tremendous cost of the prodigal's college career, and then endeavors to induce him to go to work, are rarely played, and show the extreme.

Josephine Lennard is a winsome little comedienne, and made a hit with the audience from her first song right through her repertoire. She is also a fine little dancer.

Kartell, a slack wire artist, is an artist in every sense of the word. He is also a juggler of some note. His performance last night was creditable to the extreme.

Mr. Washburn, skilful farce actor that he is, renders what is probably the cleverest performance of his entire career before the camera as the optimistic Rodney in "It Pays to Advertise." He is supported by a cast of unusual merit, headed by Lois Williams, a very good comedienne, and the recent Washburn picture, "Why Smith Left Home," has the prominent role of Ambrose Peale, which he handles with a sincerity and enthusiasm which scores every point of comedy. Frank Currier, the veteran character of the screen, is cast as Cyrus Martin, the wealthy soap manufacturer. His scenes with his son, particularly after he has figured out the tremendous cost of the prodigal's college career, and then endeavors to induce him to go to work, are rarely played, and show the extreme.

Josephine Lennard is a winsome little comedienne, and made a hit with the audience from her first song right through her repertoire. She is also a fine little dancer.

Kartell, a slack wire artist, is an artist in every sense of the word. He is also a juggler of some note. His performance last night was creditable to the extreme.

Mr. Washburn, skilful farce actor that he is, renders what is probably the cleverest performance of his entire career before the camera as the optimistic Rodney in "It Pays to Advertise." He is supported by a cast of unusual merit, headed by Lois Williams, a very good comedienne, and the recent Washburn picture, "Why Smith Left Home," has the prominent role of Ambrose Peale, which he handles with a sincerity and enthusiasm which scores every point of comedy. Frank Currier, the veteran character of the screen, is cast as Cyrus Martin, the wealthy soap manufacturer. His scenes with his son, particularly after he has figured out the tremendous cost of the prodigal's college career, and then endeavors to induce him to go to work, are rarely played, and show the extreme.

Josephine Lennard is a winsome little comedienne, and made a hit with the audience from her first song right through her repertoire. She is also a fine little dancer.

Kartell, a slack wire artist, is an artist in every sense of the word. He is also a juggler of some note. His performance last night was creditable to the extreme.

Mr. Washburn, skilful farce actor that he is, renders what is probably the cleverest performance of his entire career before the camera as the optimistic Rodney in "It Pays to Advertise." He is supported by a cast of unusual merit, headed by Lois Williams, a very good comedienne, and the recent Washburn picture, "Why Smith Left Home," has the prominent role of Ambrose Peale, which he handles with a sincerity and enthusiasm which scores every point of comedy. Frank Currier, the veteran character of the screen, is cast as Cyrus Martin, the wealthy soap manufacturer. His scenes with his son, particularly after he has figured out the tremendous cost of the prodigal's college career, and then endeavors to induce him to go to work, are rarely played, and show the extreme.

Josephine Lennard is a winsome little comedienne, and made a hit with the audience from her first song right through her repertoire. She is also a fine little dancer.

Kartell, a slack wire artist, is an artist in every sense of the word. He is also a juggler of some note. His performance last night was creditable to the extreme.

Mr. Washburn, skilful farce actor that he is, renders what is probably the cleverest performance of his entire career before the camera as the optimistic Rodney in "It Pays to Advertise." He is supported by a cast of unusual merit, headed by Lois Williams, a very good comedienne, and the recent Washburn picture, "Why Smith Left Home," has the prominent role of Ambrose Peale, which he handles with a sincerity and enthusiasm which scores every point of comedy. Frank Currier, the veteran character of the screen, is cast as Cyrus Martin, the wealthy soap manufacturer. His scenes with his son, particularly after he has figured out the tremendous cost of the prodigal's college career, and then endeavors to induce him to go to work, are rarely played, and show the extreme.

Josephine Lennard is a winsome little comedienne, and made a hit with the audience from her first song right through her repertoire. She is also a fine little dancer.

Kartell, a slack wire artist, is an artist in every sense of the word. He is also a juggler of some note. His performance last night was creditable to the extreme.

Mr. Washburn, skilful farce actor that he is, renders what is probably the cleverest performance of his entire career before the camera as the optimistic Rodney in "It Pays to Advertise." He is supported by a cast of unusual merit, headed by Lois Williams, a very good comedienne, and the recent Washburn picture, "Why Smith Left Home," has the prominent role of Ambrose Peale, which he handles with a sincerity and enthusiasm which scores every point of comedy. Frank Currier, the veteran character of the screen, is cast as Cyrus Martin, the wealthy soap manufacturer. His scenes with his son, particularly after he has figured out the tremendous cost of the prodigal's college career, and then endeavors to induce him to go to work, are rarely played, and show the extreme.

Josephine Lennard is a winsome little comedienne, and made a hit with the audience from her first song right through her repertoire. She is also a fine little dancer.

Kartell, a slack wire artist, is an artist in every sense of the word. He is also a juggler of some note. His performance last night was creditable to the extreme.

Mr. Washburn, skilful farce actor that he is, renders what is probably the cleverest performance of his entire career before the camera as the optimistic Rodney in "It Pays to Advertise." He is supported by a cast of unusual merit, headed by Lois Williams, a very good comedienne, and the recent Washburn picture, "Why Smith Left Home," has the prominent role of Ambrose Peale, which he handles with a sincerity and enthusiasm which scores every point of comedy. Frank Currier, the veteran character of the screen, is cast as Cyrus Martin, the wealthy soap manufacturer. His scenes with his son, particularly after he has figured out the tremendous cost of the prodigal's college career, and then endeavors to induce him to go to work, are rarely played, and show the extreme.

Josephine Lennard is a winsome little comedienne, and made a hit with the audience from her first song right through her repertoire. She is also a fine little dancer.

Kartell, a slack wire artist, is an artist in every sense of the word. He is also a juggler of some note. His performance last night was creditable to the extreme.

Mr. Washburn, skilful farce actor that he is, renders what is probably the cleverest performance of his entire career before the camera as the optimistic Rodney in "It Pays to Advertise." He is supported by a cast of unusual merit, headed by Lois Williams, a very good comedienne, and the recent Washburn picture, "Why Smith Left Home," has the prominent role of Ambrose Peale, which he handles with a sincerity and enthusiasm which scores every point of comedy. Frank Currier, the veteran character of the screen, is cast as Cyrus Martin, the wealthy soap manufacturer. His scenes with his son, particularly after he has figured out the tremendous cost of the prodigal's college career, and then endeavors to induce him to go to work, are rarely played, and show the extreme.

Josephine Lennard is a winsome little comedienne, and made a hit with the audience from her first song right through her repertoire. She is also a fine little dancer.

Kartell, a slack wire artist, is an artist in every sense of the word. He is also a juggler of some note. His performance last night was creditable to the extreme.

Mr. Washburn, skilful farce actor that he is, renders what is probably the cleverest performance of his entire career before the camera as the optimistic Rodney in "It Pays to Advertise." He is supported by a cast of unusual merit, headed by Lois Williams, a very good comedienne, and the recent Washburn picture, "Why Smith Left Home," has the prominent role of Ambrose Peale, which he handles with a sincerity and enthusiasm which scores every point of comedy. Frank Currier, the veteran character of the screen, is cast as Cyrus Martin, the wealthy soap manufacturer. His scenes with his son, particularly after he has figured out the tremendous cost of the prodigal's college career, and then endeavors to induce him to go to work, are rarely played, and show the extreme.

Josephine Lennard is a winsome little comedienne, and made a hit with the audience from her first song right through her repertoire. She is also a fine little dancer.

Kartell, a slack wire artist, is an artist in every sense of the word. He is also a juggler of some note. His performance last night was creditable to the extreme.

Mr. Washburn, skilful farce actor that he is, renders what is probably the cleverest performance of his entire career before the camera as the optimistic Rodney in "It Pays to Advertise." He is supported by a cast of unusual merit, headed by Lois Williams, a very good comedienne, and the recent Washburn picture, "Why Smith Left Home," has the prominent role of Ambrose Peale, which he handles with a sincerity and enthusiasm which scores every point of comedy. Frank Currier, the veteran character of the screen, is cast as Cyrus Martin, the wealthy soap manufacturer. His scenes with his son, particularly after he has figured out the tremendous cost of the prodigal's college career, and then endeavors to induce him to go to work, are rarely played, and show the extreme.

Josephine Lennard is a winsome little comedienne, and made a hit with the audience from her first song right through her repertoire. She is also a fine little dancer.

Kartell, a slack wire artist, is an artist in every sense of the word. He is also a juggler of some note. His performance last night was creditable to the extreme.

Mr. Washburn, skilful farce actor that he is, renders what is probably the cleverest performance of his entire career before the camera as the optimistic Rodney in "It Pays to Advertise." He is supported by a cast of unusual merit, headed by Lois Williams, a very good comedienne, and the recent Washburn picture, "Why Smith Left Home," has the prominent role of Ambrose Peale, which he handles with a sincerity and enthusiasm which scores every point of comedy. Frank Currier, the veteran character of the screen, is cast as Cyrus Martin, the wealthy soap manufacturer. His scenes with his son, particularly after he has figured out the tremendous cost of the prodigal's college career, and then endeavors to induce him to go to work, are rarely played, and show the extreme.

Josephine Lennard is a winsome little comedienne, and made a hit with the audience from her first song right through her repertoire. She is also a fine little dancer.

Kartell, a slack wire artist, is an artist in every sense of the word. He is also a juggler of some note. His performance last night was creditable to the extreme.

Mr. Washburn, skilful farce actor that he is, renders what is probably the cleverest performance of his entire career before the camera as the optimistic Rodney in "It Pays to Advertise." He is supported by a cast of unusual merit, headed by Lois Williams, a very good comedienne, and the recent Washburn picture, "Why Smith Left Home," has the prominent role of Ambrose Peale, which he handles with a sincerity and enthusiasm which scores every point of comedy. Frank Currier, the veteran character of the screen, is cast as Cyrus Martin, the wealthy soap manufacturer. His scenes with his son, particularly after he has figured out the tremendous cost of the prodigal's college career, and then endeavors to induce him to go to work, are rarely played, and show the extreme.

Josephine Lennard is a winsome little comedienne, and made a hit with the audience from her first song right through her repertoire. She is also a fine little dancer.

Kartell, a slack wire artist, is an artist in every sense of the word. He is also a juggler of some note. His performance last night was creditable to the extreme.

Mr. Washburn, skilful farce actor that he is, renders what is probably the cleverest performance of his entire career before the camera as the optimistic Rodney in "It Pays to Advertise." He is supported by a cast of unusual merit, headed by Lois Williams, a very good comedienne, and the recent Washburn picture, "Why Smith Left Home," has the prominent role of Ambrose Peale, which he handles with a sincerity and enthusiasm which scores every point of comedy. Frank Currier, the veteran character of the screen, is cast as Cyrus Martin, the wealthy soap manufacturer. His scenes with his son, particularly after he has figured out the tremendous cost of the prodigal's college career, and then endeavors to induce him to go to work, are rarely played, and show the extreme.

Josephine Lennard is a winsome little comedienne, and made a hit with the audience from her first song right through her repertoire. She is also a fine little dancer.

Kartell, a slack wire artist, is an artist in every sense of the word. He is also a juggler of some note. His performance last night was creditable to the extreme.

Mr. Washburn, skilful farce actor that he is, renders what is probably the cleverest performance of his entire career before the camera as the optimistic Rodney in "It Pays to Advertise." He is supported by a cast of unusual merit, headed by Lois Williams, a very good comedienne, and the recent Washburn picture, "Why Smith Left Home," has the prominent role of Ambrose Peale, which he handles with a sincerity and enthusiasm which scores every point of comedy. Frank Currier, the veteran character of the screen, is cast as Cyrus Martin, the wealthy soap manufacturer. His scenes with his son, particularly after he has figured out the tremendous cost of the prodigal's college career, and then endeavors to induce him to go to work, are rarely played, and show the extreme.

Josephine Lennard is a winsome little comedienne, and made a hit with the audience from her first song right through her repertoire. She is also a fine little dancer.

Kartell, a slack wire artist, is an artist in every sense of the word. He is also a juggler of some note. His performance last night was creditable to the extreme.

Mr. Washburn, skilful farce actor that he is, renders what is probably the cleverest performance of his entire career before the camera as the optimistic Rodney in "It Pays to Advertise." He is supported by a cast of unusual merit, headed by Lois Williams, a very good comedienne, and the recent Washburn picture, "Why Smith Left Home," has the prominent role of Ambrose Peale, which he handles with a sincerity and enthusiasm which scores every point of comedy. Frank Currier, the veteran character of the screen, is cast as Cyrus Martin, the wealthy soap manufacturer. His scenes with his son, particularly after he has figured out the tremendous cost of the prodigal's college career, and then endeavors to induce him to go to work, are rarely played, and show the extreme.

Josephine Lennard is a winsome little comedienne, and made a hit with the audience from her first song right through her repertoire. She is also a fine little dancer.

Kartell, a slack wire artist, is an artist in every sense of the word. He is also a juggler of some note. His performance last night was creditable to the extreme.

Mr. Washburn, skilful farce actor that he is, renders what is probably the cleverest performance of his entire career before the camera as the optimistic Rodney in "It Pays to Advertise." He is supported by a cast of unusual merit, headed by Lois Williams, a very good comedienne, and the recent Washburn picture, "Why Smith Left Home," has the prominent role of Ambrose Peale, which he handles with a sincerity and enthusiasm which scores every point of comedy. Frank Currier, the veteran character of the screen, is cast as Cyrus Martin, the wealthy soap manufacturer. His scenes with his son, particularly after he has figured out the tremendous cost of the prodigal's college career, and then endeavors to induce him to go to work, are rarely played, and show the extreme.

Josephine Lennard is a winsome little comedienne, and made a hit with the audience from her first song right through her repertoire. She is also a fine little dancer.

Kartell, a slack wire artist, is an artist in every sense of the word. He is also a juggler of some note. His performance last night was creditable to the extreme.

Mr. Washburn, skilful farce actor that he is, renders what is probably the cleverest performance of his entire career before the camera as the optimistic Rodney in "It Pays to Advertise." He is supported by a cast of unusual merit, headed by Lois Williams, a very good comedienne, and the recent Washburn picture, "Why Smith Left Home," has the prominent role of Ambrose Peale, which he handles with a sincerity and enthusiasm which scores every point of comedy. Frank Currier, the veteran character of the screen, is cast as Cyrus Martin, the wealthy soap manufacturer. His scenes with his son, particularly after he has figured out the tremendous cost of the prodigal's college career, and then endeavors to induce him to go to work, are rarely played, and show the extreme.

Josephine Lennard is a winsome little comedienne, and made a hit with the audience from her first song right through her repertoire. She is also a fine little dancer.

Kartell, a slack wire artist, is an artist in every sense of the word. He is also a juggler of some note. His performance last night was creditable to the extreme.

Mr. Washburn, skilful farce actor that he is, renders what is probably the cleverest performance of his entire career before the camera as the optimistic Rodney in "It Pays to Advertise." He is supported by a cast of unusual merit, headed by Lois Williams, a very good comedienne, and the recent Washburn picture, "Why Smith Left Home," has the prominent role of Ambrose Peale, which he handles with a sincerity and enthusiasm which scores every point of comedy. Frank Currier, the veteran character of the screen, is cast as Cyrus Martin, the wealthy soap manufacturer. His scenes with his son, particularly after he has figured out the tremendous cost of the prodigal's college career, and then endeavors to induce him to go to work, are rarely played, and show the extreme.

Josephine Lennard is a winsome little comedienne, and made a hit with the audience from her first song right through her repertoire. She is also a fine little dancer.

Kartell, a slack wire artist, is an artist in every sense of the word. He is also a juggler of some note. His performance last night was creditable to the extreme.

Mr. Washburn, skilful farce actor that he is, renders what is probably the cleverest performance of his entire career before the camera as the optimistic Rodney in "It Pays to Advertise." He is supported by a cast of unusual merit, headed by Lois Williams, a very good comedienne, and the recent Washburn picture, "Why Smith Left Home," has the prominent role of Ambrose Peale, which he handles with a sincerity and enthusiasm which scores every point of comedy. Frank Currier, the veteran character of the screen, is cast as Cyrus Martin, the wealthy soap manufacturer. His scenes with his son, particularly after he has figured out the tremendous cost of the prodigal's college career, and then endeavors to induce him to go to work, are rarely played, and show the extreme.

Josephine Lennard is a wins