A special service took place in Waterbury street United Baptist church, last night, when Leon Green, who has enlisted as a gunner in the Siege Battery was publicly presented by Deacon Jas. ## Y.M.C.A. WORK AT HOME AND IN THIS GREAT WAR

COLONEL FOWLER ADDRESSES MEN WHO ARE LEAVING SOON TO JOIN RANKS OF HIS BATTALION

Rev. Dr. Morison devotes morning service to young men of the world.

On Sunday morning Rev. Dr. Morison devoted the sermon to the work of the Y.M.C.A. at home and in the war zone. There was a good congregation present and Dr. Morison's words were followed with much interest as he narrated the magnificent services that were being rendered to the Empire by this progressive organization.

Taking as his text Zech 2 and 4: "Run speak to this young man," Dr. Morison said in part:

"Think what a grand thing it is to be young, to have physical faculties fresh and vigorous, to have perceptive faculties bright and clear, to have receptive faculties strong so that truth can readily be apprehended and retained, to have nature not yet hardened by the strife of life, to have as the poet has said 'The best is yet to be,' to have turned but a few pages of the volume of life, to have the burden of regret as yet but a small burden. O what a glorious thing it is to be a young man!

"The ancient Greeks always enthused whenever they thought of the period of youth. The historian Plutarch tells us of how at the annual feasts it was the custom to have three male choroi, a choir of old men, a choir of middle-aged men and a choir of young men.

"The choir of old men with their grey locks and trembling voices began the chorus with the words 'Once in battle bold we shone,' then the middle-life took up the sentence 'Try us our vigor is not gone,' and when they had concluded the youths full of energy caught up the chorus 'The palm remains for us alone.'

"We are not surprised that D'Israeli wrote 'The history of heroes is the history of youth.' In all ages of the world life and work a very large place has been occupied by young men.

"Open the word of God and within its sacred pages you will discover in what way young men ever fought to the front. Thus Samuel, Solomon, Daniel, Paul, and Timothy and even with Jesus himself. Turning from the sacred to the profane page, the names of men who have immortalized themselves while yet young are crowded upon us.

"Among warriors there are Alexander the Great, who conquered the world before he was thirty, Napoleon only 27 when he led his grand campaign into Italy, George Washington about the same age when he covered the retreat of the British troops at Braddock's defeat and was appointed to the command of all the Virginian forces.

"Among philosophers we have Francis Bacon discovering the futility of the Aristotelian philosophy when a mere lad and publishing a learned work when only 19 years old. David Hume planning his treatise on Human Nature before he was 21. Pascal issuing a treatise on conic sections when he was only 16.

"Among orators we have Demosthenes second to none pleading his own case at 17 years of age and taking a conspicuous part in public life at 22. We have Cicero pleading the case of Quinctius at the bar when he was only 26 years of age.

"Among musicians we have Mozart playing before the Emperor of Germany when 6 years of age. Handel composing a set of Sonatas at the age of 10 years. Mendelssohn distinguished as a famous musician when he was 16.

"Among the poets we have Dante who published his Vita Nuova at 27 years of age. Keats publishing his Endymion at 22, Campbell his Pleasures of Hope at 21, Percy Bysshe Shelley his Queen Mab at 18, and Thomas Moore writing for the Dublin Magazine when he was only 14 years of age.

"Among theologians we have Innocent 14th, the greatest of Popes, when he was only 37 years of age. We have Ignatius Loyola founder of the great Jesuit Order writing his 'Spiritual Exercises' when he was only 20 years old. We have John Calvin, who published his Institutes at 26 years of age. We have John Wesley, fellow and tutor of Lincoln College, Oxford, at 23. We have John Kitto contributing essays to the Plymouth Journal when 19 years old.

"Orators, theologians, statesmen, authors, musicians, warriors—all young men, who have won and kept the crown. Were it necessary to compile satisfactorily the list for the purpose of evidence by bringing it down to the memories of contemporaries I might point to the late Wm. B. Gladstone, Lord Wolsey, Henry M. Stanley, Charles H. Spurgeon, all of whom had engraved their names high in the Temple of Fame while they were yet young men.

After sketching the history of the organization since its founding in London in the year 1844, Dr. Morison paid high compliment to the Y.M.C.A. for the most useful part which its officers have fulfilled among the Canadian soldiers during the present war both at Valcartier and at the various camps in England as well as at the front and indicated how without distinction of race or religion their representatives had taken deliver from the oppressor, to avenge bloodshed.

"I have coaxed much, talked nicely, sometimes also harshly, but I have said nothing but what I have thought right, because I like to see a man living right and doing right. I can't understand how any fit man between eighteen and forty can walk away about the streets, careless of the serious conditions prevailing, without the finger of conscience pointing accusingly at him. If you are occupying a comfortable seat you have no right to cast any slur on any man who has volunteered for the front. You have no right to say 'he went because he hadn't a job.' I have a list of men in St. John which I will not publish yet, only that he didn't think it his business whether a man enlisted or not; it was not his affair. Then, in God's name to whom does it belong? I want to say that some of you are just as responsible to God as is a member of parliament.

"If you only know how tense the struggle is now you would wake up. If you, yourself, can't go have you tried to get someone else to do so? Are you going to help in finishing the work of bringing Canada's men up to 250,000? If you do this we may have peace next year. There is great danger, and yet still some hold back. All kinds of excuses are made. In St. John you have small limitations of men. I met one, a clergyman, the other day at tea. He discussed the matter at length and after he had finished a lady remarked to me that she thought him a 'model man.' I agreed, but because of the way with which he dealt with the issue was constrained to say that he was a model in a small imitation of the real article.

"It is time we did less talking and more work. I believe God means us to have the victory. It is for us, as a nation, to do our part and prove that peace won't be far off. Are you ready? Will you join now? The men who have joined during the past week are tip-top men. Will you go with them, tomorrow. Play the man with men."

A pleasing feature of the meeting was the fine stage decorations. The flags used were kindly loaned by R. H. Dockrill.

The Travellers.

The Maritime Commercial Travellers' Association met in the Board of Trade rooms, Prince William street, Saturday evening, to discuss the possibility of forming a travellers' platoon, or company, in connection with the 104th Battalion. A circular letter, containing a personal appeal for the formation of such a platoon or company had been sent to all members of the association beforehand, and copies of the same letter were distributed about the room in which the meeting was held. W. A. Stewart, chairman of the association, occupied the chair. The meeting was opened by a brief speech from Mr. Stewart, introducing Col. Fowler, who was then called upon to speak.

Colonel Fowler.

"I did not come here," he said, "to make a speech, but to give you men a plain straightforward talk. This letter which has been placed in my hands expresses exactly the state of the case, so I will not say more than that. I know the travellers to be a good class of men, and our chief object is to make the 104th as fine a body of men as ever stepped on the ground. But before we go any further, let me say that the number 104th was chosen so as to make the regiment as purely a New Brunswick unit as possible, and that is the number of a famous New Brunswick regiment in the splendid work, so that the men in the present 104th will have something to live up to. All the men now enlisted are of a fine class, we have tried to get as good as possible, and I think we have met with fairly good success, so far, at least.

"Now, I would like to have as many travellers in my regiment as I can get. I would like to see a whole company of them formed, but if that is too much, I want to see at least a platoon. If you form more than one platoon, and not enough for two, I promise you that the rest of that platoon will be filled up with men who are of a character as good as yourselves.

"The officer in direct command of the platoon or platoons you form, will be chosen from among you, if you so wish.

"As to the location of the platoon, I can say nothing definite at present, but as far as we know now, two companies will be stationed in Sussex, one in Fredericton, and one in Woodstock, for the winter, but in the spring, the whole battalion will assemble at Sussex for drill. But it may be possible that, if the majority of the men are from St. John, the platoon will be stationed there for the winter."

Several of the men assembled had questions to ask, and Col. Fowler explained these points as far as it was in his power to do so, and it is hardly possible that any of the men left the meeting with any point in doubt save the direct question of whether to join the platoon or not.

ORGAN MUSIC PRESENTED TO THE CHURCH

Rev. Dr. Morison makes gift on behalf of a friend in Montreal.

An unique and pleasing incident took place at the morning service of the First Presbyterian church, West Side, yesterday when the minister, Rev. Dr. Morison invited the elders to accept for the church three volumes of music for the organ beautifully bound in Morocco.

This music was all personally selected by a friend of Dr. Morison's, a comfortable set you have no right to cast any slur on any man who has volunteered for the front. You have no right to say 'he went because he hadn't a job.' I have a list of men in St. John which I will not publish yet, only that he didn't think it his business whether a man enlisted or not; it was not his affair. recruiting committee, then explained that the apparent lack of action on the part of employers was not due to the employers themselves, for they could not very well say to their men, what they would do if they enlisted. That would be too much like suggesting that the men should enlist. But, he explained, if the men would ask the employers what they would do, there was hardly any doubt that every one of them would do something to increase the income of the families of men who had enlisted.

L. P. D. Tilley, M. L. A., was then called upon to speak. He told the men what his view on the matter was, saying that they agreed exactly with those of the former speakers. He then invited Col. Fowler to come up to the rostrum that was being given to the recruits in Queen's rink, to address the men, who were to be in his command very shortly.

The meeting was then brought to a close by giving hearty cheers for Col. Fowler. At the last meeting of the association, the names of six members who had offered to go with such a platoon, if it were formed, were read. At this meeting, the names of six more were handed in. The names of all who have now volunteered with this platoon are as follows:

James Turnbull,
A. C. Turner,
W. R. Wilson,
J. V. Kierstead,
J. F. Whitley,
M. Malaney,
F. White,

In Queen's Rink

A fine demonstration was given in the Queen's Rink Saturday night when citizens assembled to bid farewell to the men who have joined the 104th Battalion and will go to Sussex this week. The band of the regiment was present and took part in the programme. Men prominent in civic life were in attendance and spoke words of appreciation for the men who are going to fight for a just cause. Members of the Scotch Boys' Brigade were there too, and gave a demonstration of drill.

During the evening Lieutenant-Colonel George W. Fowler appeared in the rink. He was greeted by a storm of applause and cheers. He was immediately called upon to speak to those present. He said he had little to say, but he wished the men of St. John to know that he was thankful for the treatment accorded him at the meeting Thursday night. He was proud to think that this city had given so many of her sons and he hoped the recruiting would continue unabated.

He hoped that real men would come with the 104th Battalion. There was nothing to be afraid of. The German people were not the great geniuses some people were wont to imagine. They were not leaders in the sciences, nor in other lines. They simply were followers, commercializing the ideas of other peoples. Germans did not excel in the manly pursuits. None of them had won renown as fighters. They were good organizers but that was about all.

Colonel Fowler had talked to men back from the front and they all agreed that man for man the Germans were no match for the Canadian. The Canadians were used to relying upon themselves and this training proved beneficial in a battle.

In conclusion Colonel Fowler asked for all who could join the 104th. He promised them all the consideration that good soldiers should have. His speech was well received and the crowd was particularly liberal with applause.

During the evening refreshments were served and smokes passed them.

Yesterday afternoon the police found three head of cattle wandering at large on City Road and placed them for safe keeping in John McBride's stable, Maymarket square, where they await their owner. Two head of cattle found on Friday around the same part of the city are still in the same stable waiting for someone to come and claim them.
