Legal Decisions

1. Any person who takes a paper regularly from the Post Office—whether directed to his name or another's or whether he has subscribed or not—is responsible for the payment.

2. If a person orders his paper discontinued, he must pay up all arrearages, and the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made, and collect the whole amount, whether the paper is taken from the office or not.

3. The courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers and periodicals from the Post Office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

Garfield Tea.

It was a long time since any one had thanked the good for nothing, and he started up in blank amazement and saw a man of about his own age, in red coat and top-hats plentifully bespattered with mud, looking down at him from the back of a weight carrying hunter, without the least gleam of aversion or suspicion on his pleasant, fresh colored face.

"You look rather done up. Been long on the road?"

"A week or more." The reply was surly enough; not that Jim resented question, but simply because he was so used to insults and rough speaking that the idea of a "blooming swell" speaking civilly to such as he took him utterly by surprise.

"Going home?"

Jim gave a contemptuous grunt.

"Never had any, guv'nor."

"Poor chap! But you live somewhere I suppose?"

"Oh, yes—with a grim chuckle,

"I live somewheres—anywheres. I'm not like some folks, must have everything tip-top. No; that's not my style.

Y'e've a big house, of course, and lots of slaves to wait on, say. I lives just where I can, and have to find for myself, but don't often get my meals reg'lar."

"Can't you get into regular work and leave this tramp business?"

POETRY.

What She Said and What She Did.

"I never will marry," she said—she said—

"Unless a young man that just suits me I find;

Taller than I by at least half a head

He surely must be, with a face bright and kind;

His eyes I'd prefer of a violet blue,

His hair a light brown or a very warm gold;

He must sing—a fine tenor—and dance nicely, too,

And tell as good stories as ever were told.

No smoking allowed, for the weed I detest,

And of course no remarks that are rude or illbred;

And I'd like him to be as nicely stylishly dressed,

The young man I marry," she said, she said.

And then the maid married—she did—

she did—

A three-score old fellow much shorter than she,

Who wore a short wig that but awkwardly hid

A pate that no baldier could possibly be;

And his voice was a creak, and he danced like a bear,

And he smoked a clay pipe, and from morning till night

In his mouth held of strongest tobacco a quid;

And he dressed—but enough, he had two millions quite,

And she married him gladly—she did,

she did.

SELECT STORY.

Jim.

Jim came out of jail utterly reckless, with a wild hatred of everybody and everything. He thought no more of getting work, but let himself drift resolutely to the bad. He soon got into vicious company, and before many weeks he was, again in the clutches of the law. The downhill road is an easy one and the pace always rapid, and so at thirty years of age he was pretty widely known to the authorities as a confirmed rogue and thief who would not stick at trifles when once he was roused.

Yes; there was no doubting it, he was an out-and-out bad lot! He looked it, too, as he slouched along the country lane, with hands deep in his empty pockets and his head bent to meet the rain which the November wind drove in his face. But he was too much used to discomfort to heed the weather, and plodded sullenly on through the puddles in the deepening gloom, half asleep, and so utterly careless of everything around that he never heard the beat of hoofs until Hugh Boynton's cheery voice cried:

"Now, my good fellow, if you do not want the whole road to yourself, perhaps you will let me pass?"

Jim never looked around but sunk closer to the dripping hedge-row, expect-
