Thirty years ago Maya inscriptions were a sealed book, and yet today we read of the rise and fall of the several cities in relation to one another, and follow even though we cannot fill in the background. The nature of the several in scriptions is, of course, similar to more recent writings of this prehistoric race, yet the forms of the particular characters are so elemental that only the date, signs or numbers are translatable.

In determining the date of this fig ure, however, a valuable clue or index to further research and investigation gives a hint to the further excavations there in the hope of locating more branch of the Maya race.

The general shape of the figure was evidently laboriously worked out from a block of irregular conical outline, by pecking with a stone hammer, the unevenness of the surface, especially on the front and back never having been fully removed, although the stone is well polished. The under surface shows that characteristic markings produced by primitive methods of sawing hard stone before the discovery of metals. Broad, shallow lines trace the composite features of the man and bird, and establish the fact that the polishing was done after they were cut. All the glyphs, however were added after, the shaving of the various features of the image was completed and the surface polished.
