SUNDERED.

BY E. BECK.

It is not the mountains high grand With the snow. Nor is it the wastes of arid sand, Or the valleys long and low; Nor is it the rivers swift or wide,

Nor the sea without an end O'er whose crested wave the tall ships

That can sever friend from friend. But mistrust and doubt and suspicion wrong. The glance of a scornful eye, The bitter words of an angry tongue, And the angering, quick reply, Can end the friendships of many

Can sunder heart from heart, And can leave the friends that were near and dear As far as the poles apart. -Ave Maria.

Many of this younger generation are married to persons in their own class, while I have had two daughters and have three grandchildren."

When I had had this interesting I thought I would like some details of his Holiness from a familiar point of view. "Now that your brother will you continue to be postmanan employee of the King of Italyand shopkeeper in your little village? Have you no desire to live near Pius X.?" I asked. Signor Angelo re-at the Vatican, and is so accustomed to being taken care of by my sisters that he must long for them.

Signor Angelo may be quite right. I am sure he is; but what is certain is that his three sisters (now no longer young) lament from morning to night the separation from their favorite brother, fearing for his comfort and realizing with a kind of despair that separation is as final almost as though he had died.

Signor Angelo seemed to take great pleasure in recalling early days and stories of Pius X. : "We had our house, a little ground and some furniture, that was all, and little enough it was for a family of ten, so we were obliged to live carefully, very carefully indeed. Papa was most religious, like Beppi, and taught us the rudiments of religion; but we could only sign our names and could read fluently enough, while Giuseppe devoured whatever came in his way. When he began to go to school he took all the prizes, made such progress that he (and I, too) was sent to Castelfranco to A Talk With the Brother school, a donkey being bought at considerable sacrifice to take us there, we boys quarreling regularly (Salvatore Cortesi in the Independent.) every day as to who should drive it. What would she have said if she had seen bim in white?"

With these words Signor Angel went his way.

Monks Compiled the Early Dictionaries.

Dr. J. A. H. Murray, editor of the New English Dictionary, told his hearers a great many interesting things about dictionaries in the course of a recent lecture. The word dictionarium, he said, appeared first in 1225 and though "dictionary" was used in its modern sense in 1542, it had not then ousted either the more correct word "vocabulary" or the fanciful titles which early compilers liked to enjoy. The contents of the earliest dictionaries were not arranged in alphabetical order, but under subject headings; it is only since the end of the sixteenth century that the alphabetical arrangement has become uni versal in Europe, an arrangement which is responsible for the wrongfu application of the title "dictionary" to any work treating of subjects-e. g., cabinet-making or national biography -in alphabetical order. A diction ary is properly a book about words.

The average persons seem some how to think of dictionaries as the invention of Dr. Johnson and an not the work of one or several men, he told his audience, but a growth developed through the ages. They began with the glosses—that is, the xplanation in easy Latin or Englishof hard Latin words written by the onks between the lines of the manu. scripts. The glosses grew into trans lations, and collections of glosses by this monk or that from all the sources available to him made glossaries or dictionaries. Little by little English supplanted the easy Latin explanaions, and the words were arranged in rudimentary alphabetical order, thus forming, so long ago as 1000 A. D., Latin-English dictionaries.

The first book with the title of 'An English Dictionary" was published in 1623. Such works were mainly compiled for the use of women and other unskilful persons." In the year 1721 appeared the first attempt at a complete dic-His folio edition, published in 1730, was the working basis of Dr John son's Dictionary. In the reign of Anne—an age of rest and subsistence from troubles-when the language had reached maturity, the demand arose from a standard dictionary which should fix for ever (a childlike aud pathetic aim) the correct usage. Pope interested himself in the plan. It fell to Johnson to execute it, at a cost of time, labor and money that ar exceeded the calculations of bimself or his syndicate of booksellers. The especially new feature of the work was the quotations, all gathered by Johnson himself and copied by assistants. They were printed without verification or reference, and he proofs were not carefully read, change.

While Barney Oldfields' racing automobile was running nearly 60 miles an hour at the Grosse Point track Detroit last Wednesday afternoon in the ten mile open event, one of from tires burnt through and exploded throwing the car into the fence and injuring Frank Shearer, a spectator, so badly that he died in ambulance en route to a hospital. The car went fifty feet through the air, and Oldfield, who kept his seat, had a marvelouses cape from death. He received several cut about the body and had one rib broken. It was an afternoon of accidents at the track, two other high gower machines, those driven by Harry Cunningham and Henri Page, the Parisian, coming to grief, because of the tires. Fortunately no one was hurt in either of these accidents. As Oldfield was turning into the stretch on his seventh mile the friction on the upper front tire burned it through and it exploded. The car with its tremendous momentum, shot for the outer edge of the track, which is six feet above the ground beyond, Oldfield has just time to twist his brake and head for a spot between two trees. Shearer was standing against the fence at this point and the car struck him squarely breaking both legs in several places and fracturing his skull. He was thrown seventy five feet and never recovered conscious ness. Oldfield had presence of mind enough to throw himself backward on the flat deck of the car, which went crushing through a low tree and landed a wreck, fifty feet beyond. cident.
