

CURE SICK HEADACHE

Headache, cure Carter's Little Liver Pills are equally valuable in Constipation, curing and preventing this annoying complaint, while they cure all disorders of the stomach, stimulate the liver and regulate the bowels. Even if they only cure one of these, they are worth the price.

And they would be almost priceless to those who suffer from this distressing complaint, but fortunately their goodness does not end here, and those who once try them will find these little pills valuable in many ways that they will not wish to miss. In fact, they are worth the price. Buy at drug stores everywhere, or sent by mail.

DIANA WENTWORTH,

Or, The Professor's Daughter.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

NO NEWS.

John did not tell Susan as soon as he got home. He hoped to hear from Diana in the morning, and he thought he would wait till then. But no letter came, and although he was not disappointed, he was scarcely surprised. The chances were a thousand to one against her seeing Tom the very day she got to Whitfield. This day, however, was the last he would spend at home; he was leaving early next morning for London. There were final arrangements to be made and instructions to be given, which took up a great deal of time. When these had been disposed of, he told Susan all that Diana had asked him to tell.

"I know she would consent," said Susan, when he had got to the end of his story.

"How?" he asked, quickly.

"When she was here I saw that she loved you. Eh, John, I wonder you did not see it too."

He did not answer, and Susan went on—

"She is very beautiful; I never saw any one half so beautiful. The Miss Merediths and the other ladies in this country-side are not to be compared to her, and she seemed very kind and pleasant, for you can see she's been accustomed to things very different from what we have here. I do hope you will be happy with her; but, John, I can't fancy her here."

"She will not live here; she will most likely live in London."

"And I wonder," suddenly broke out Susan, throwing down her work and looking almost yearningly at her cousin. "I wonder if she knows what she has got, when she's got there?"

"Why, Susan?" he said, laughing, "she does not think of me as you do, as if I had got no faults; she sees heaps of them, and does not hesitate to tell me if I do anything she does not like."

"I'm sure she will do that, but the woman whom you love ought to have a very different feeling for you from any cousin's; and I thought that love was blind."

"That is because you have never loved," said John, in blissful ignorance of what he was talking about. "If you had you would know better. Love is very quick-sighted and sees a thousand flaws where affection sees only one."

Susan caught her breath quickly. This was rather hard, but, being a woman, she could conceal her feelings, so she only said, "Well, maybe I am wrong," and soon after that she folded away her work and went upstairs.

There was no post to Beckton farm. When letters were expected, or perhaps wished for, some one went to Garthill and asked for them at the post office there. That was one reason why John was taking such an early train, that he might get his letter as early as possible. He and Susan walked into the little town together, and a very silent walk it was. John was preoccupied, busy with thoughts of the work before him and recollections of this same walk he had taken with Diana two or three days previously. The thought of the amount of work he would have to get through in London most alarmed him. He ought to have been there four hours before, but he could give as much time as possible to Diana.

Susan's heart was too full to speak. She guessed, too, of what John was thinking. After this short reunion another parting, again for years, from which he would return less her own even than now. It was very bitter, and the sight of the bare hillsides, the few trees parting reluctantly with their remaining leaves, the rush and tumble of the stream below the steep, narrow path they trod, all familiar sights and sounds as they were, seemed to accentuate her misery and loneliness.

At the bend of the valley, John paused and turned. He took a long, sweeping look around him, baring his head and letting the mountain wind blow on his face and hair. He was silent, and Susan was silent, too. His lips moved; perhaps he was invoking the genius of this solitary place, that "spirit of desolation" which brooded over it. Long he stood there, drinking it all in and a strange look swept over his face. At last he drew a long breath and turned to her again, saying,

"I shall never forget it—I shall keep it in the other world; and thank God; the old home is safe. No tropical scenery will ever seem more beautiful to me than this old English scenery—this corner of England where I and my forefathers before me were born and bred."

There was no flower blooming, not a bit of heather, a late hare-bell, or a scabious, but he gathered a few rush-like grasses and put them in his pocket-book, saying, with a smile, "Here's for you memory."

Together they ascended the sloping street, the place of Garthill. Susan remained in the shadow of the old church, with seeds on the second-floor, and from the tower of which curfew still rings night and morning, while John went into the office. In a few minutes he returned, his face so white and stern that involuntarily she asked,

"John, what's the matter? Is there bad news?"

"I suppose not," he answered; "I suppose I ought to consider it good, for there is no letter from her."

"No letter?" Susan repeated the words blankly, scarcely realizing what they meant. "What shall you do? What do you think it means?"

"I suppose it means that she has not yet been able to write; perhaps she has not yet seen Dr. Sherlock."

"But she ought to have written anyhow," said Susan, jealously. After all you had done for her, she ought to have written a few lines to say that she got safely to her journey's end. It's not manners to leave people who have been kind to you and never send them a word of thanks."

She was not thinking of herself at all, only of the slight that had been put upon him; but he frowned quickly at her words and said,

"Don't speak like that, Susan. She has not been able to write, that's clear; as soon as she can, she will. And yet," he muttered, almost to himself, "nearly her last words were 'you shall hear,' and I told her again and again that the least delay might be fatal to us."

They had left the market-place and were half-way down the steep hill to the station before either spoke again. Susan was thinking, "Perhaps she has found she likes that doctor better than she thought; or maybe the great people from the Abbey have got at her again and turned her from him. If it's either of those, it will just break his heart, and she will deserve the worst she could get."

FUN, FACTS AND FICTION

A little girl, walking one day with her mother in a graveyard, reading one after another the praises of those who slept beneath, said, "I wonder where they bury the sinners?"

'Hair Magic'—Isa good name of Dr. Dorenwend's German preparation for the hair. It really works like magic. All who have used it pronounce it to be unequalled for remedying the loss of vitality of the hair roots, restoring grey hair, removing dandruff, etc. Just try it. It is first-class. All druggists sell it.

He—I have been here every night this week so far. Do you not begin to suspect something. She—Yes, I begin to suspect I shall never have an evening to myself.

Carter's Little Liver Pills are not for Pills, as they are entirely unlike them in every respect. One trial will prove their superiority. It is related as singular that fat men never commit crime. It doesn't seem so singular when you reflect that it is difficult for a fat man to stoop to anything low.

A man's wife should always be the same, especially to her husband; but if she is weak and nervous and suffers from Piles, she cannot be, for they will make her "yes" like a different person, at least so they all say, and their husbands say so, too.

Waiter (at the club)—There's a lady outside who says that her husband promised to be home early to-night. All (rising)—Excuse me a moment.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.

When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.

When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.

When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

Caller (Sunday evening)—Is Miss Baggs at home? Servant—No, sir; I am sorry to say Miss Baggs has just gone to church.

It is a great misfortune to have a fretful disposition. It takes the fragrance out of one's life, and leaves only the seed where a cheerful disposition ought to bloom. The habit of fretting is one that grows rapidly unless it is sternly repressed.

The great lung healer is found in excellent medicine sold as Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It soothes and diminishes the sensibility of the membrane of the throat and air passages and is a sovereign remedy for all coughs, colds, hoarseness, pain or soreness in the chest, bronchitis, etc. It has cured many who supposed to be far advanced in consumption.

Mrs. Mac—Mr. Mac won't whisper soft nothings to the servant girl now without me hearing him. Mrs. Fitz—How did you fix it? Mrs. Mac—I've hired a maid so deaf that she couldn't hear an amateur on the corner.

Rheumatism is caused by a poisonous acid in the blood and yields to Ayer's Pills. Many cases which seemed chronic and hopeless have been completely cured by this medicine. It will cure but little to try what effect the pills may have in your case. We predict success.

The Head Surgeon—Of the Lubon Medical Company is now at Toronto, Canada, and may be consulted either in person or by letter on all chronic diseases peculiar to man. Men, young, old, or middle-aged, who find themselves nervous, weak and exhausted, who are broken down from excess or overwork, resulting in many of the following symptoms: Mental depression, premature old age, loss of vitality, loss of memory, bad dreams, dimness of sight, palpitation of the heart, emissions, lack of energy, pain in the kidneys, headache, pimples on the face or body, itching or peculiar sensation about the scrotum, wasting of the organs, dizziness, sleep before the eyes, twitching of the muscles, eyelids and elsewhere, backache, tenderness of the scalp and spine, weak and flabby muscles, desire to sleep, failure to be rested by sleep, constipation, dullness of hearing, loss of voice, desire for solitude, excitability of temper, sunken eyes surrounded with LEADEN CIRCLES, oily looking skin, etc., are all symptoms of nervous debility that lead to insanity and death unless cured. The spring of vital force having lost its tension every function wanes in consequence. Those who through abuse committed in ignorance deny the permanent cure. Send your address for book on all diseases peculiar to man. Address M. V. LUBON, 50 Front Street East, Toronto, Ont. Books sent free sealed. Heart disease, the symptoms of which are faint spells, purple lips, numbness, palpitation, skip beats, hot flashes, rush of blood to the head, dull pain in the heart with beats strong, regular and irregular, the second heart beat quicker than the first, pain about the breast bone, etc., can positively be cured. No cure, no pay. Send for book. Address M. V. LUBON, 50 Front Street East, Toronto, Ont. Consultations free.

A singular story comes from Dublin of a lady having been attacked in the water by a jelly fish. After a terrible struggle she was rescued by a fisherman, who, in her assistance, succeeded in killing the fish, which was an enormous size. The lady was severely stung and is said to be in a precarious condition.

Found at Last.—Housekeeper (to pleasant-faced girl at employment agency)—Have you any objection to the country?

Girl (politely)—None at all, madam.

Housekeeper—I have quite a large family. Girl—The more the merrier.

Housekeeper—Seven children, two of them quite young.

Girl—I love little children.

Housekeeper—It will be necessary for you to bake bread, wash and get the meals. I attend to the pastry and chamberwork myself.

Girl—I will also make the pastry and do the rest if you will allow me.

Housekeeper—I cannot give you more than three shillings off.

Girl—I will be sufficient, perhaps more than I will want, as my plan is to give strict attention to my household duties, and thus get the work done up promptly every day, so as to have plenty of opportunities to rest between times.

Housekeeper—I am delighted.

Stranger (suddenly entering)—Sorry to interrupt you, madam, but you are conversing with one of my patients, who has just escaped from the Hopelessly Incurable Lunatic Asylum.—[New York Weekly.]
