It passed off well enough. Neal returned to the parsonage, and finished the parsonage. The parsonage was a small, old-fashioned house, with a garden in front and a back garden. CHAPTER XXVI.

THE DOCTOR'S BIRTHDAY.

The dead of the winter passed. That is, Christmas was turned, and January had come in and was drawing to a close. Dr. Davenall's state of health was beginning to attract attention. It cannot be said that he was in the best of health, but he was certainly not in the worst.

As had Dr. Davenall. Of a naturally good constitution, temperate in his habits, taking a good deal of exercise one way or the other, his mind always occupied, he did not know what it was to have a day's illness. The great blow which had fallen upon him in the death of his son, told upon his mind more than upon his body. If it had been his shoulders and left limbs of care upon his face, it had not made him ill. It was reserved for the latter calamity to do that.

That terrible secret, whose disclosure none but the doctor knew, had nearly prostrated him—it had re-acted on the body; and when the cold fastened on him the day after the death of his son, it was a relief to the infirmity, it laid hold of him forever. He could not shake it off. Miss Davenall, old man somewhat crossly that he kept telling about upon cold, but the doctor knew himself that it was a relief to the infirmity, it laid hold of him forever.

He could not shake it off. Miss Davenall, old man somewhat crossly that he kept telling about upon cold, but the doctor knew himself that it was a relief to the infirmity, it laid hold of him forever. He could not shake it off. Miss Davenall, old man somewhat crossly that he kept telling about upon cold, but the doctor knew himself that it was a relief to the infirmity, it laid hold of him forever.

And so, with his aching mind and his aching body, he went about his work. It is just possible that a bright ray of light might have saved him, but he did not take it. He went about his work as usual—nay, more than his wonted activity, for it was a season of much sickness at Hallingham, as it was in winter in many other places. He bore on, never flagging; but he knew that his day was passing.

He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing.

He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing.

He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing.

He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing.

He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing.

He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing. He knew that his day was passing.

PRESS AND PEOPLE.

MURIO IN THE FLAT.

When Tom and I were married we took a little flat. I had a taste for singing, and for playing and all that. And Tom, who loved to hear me, said he hoped I would not stop. All praise, like so many wives who let their music drop.

So I resolved to set apart an hour or two each day. To keep my vocal chords and hands in trim to sing and play.

The second morning I had been for half an hour or more. As work on Harold's Masses, when a tap came at my door. A nurse who wore a dainty cap, an apron, and a smile, ran down to ask if I would cease my music for a while.

The lady in the flat above was very sick, she said. And the sound of my piano was distracting to her head. A fortnight's exercise lost—then I began them.

The following morning at my door there came a tap again. A woman with an anguished face implored me to stop. My music for some days to come—a man was dead below.

I shut down my piano till the corpse had left the house. And spoke to Tom in whispers and was quiet as a mouse.

A week of labor limbered up my stiffened hands and voice. I stole an extra hour from sleep to practice and rehearse. When "ling-a-ling" the door-bell rang—a visitor in my flat.

The lady in the flat across was very, very ill. For ten long days that infant's life was hanging by a thread. And all that time my instrument was silent as the dead.

So pain and death and sickness came in one when babies were not born above then tenants died below. The funeral over, underneath, someone fell ill on top.

And begged me for the love of God to let me play. When trouble came not up or down it stalked across the hall. And in spite of my resolve, I never play at all.

Dr. G. C. Osmond, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
