London, April 6.—Official announcement of the King's intention to visit Ireland with the Queen has caused the greatest enthusiasm in that island, which quite recently has had more occasions for self-congratulation than in many years. At first it was fancied that their majesties proposed to witness the race for the international cup, but it is thought more likely that after the Cowes regatta the King and Queen will start on a cruise around the Irish coast. They will probably reach Dublin about the date of the horse show. It is generally understood that the King has a considerable share in bringing about the recent satisfactory reversal of the Government policy for Ireland, and that it is personally his sincere wish that every cause for friction between the two countries shall be removed. The introduction of the land bill, as was expected, has aroused much speculation as to the prospective developments of the Government's Irish policy.

Lord Dunraven, as a representative Irish landlord, speaking recently of that part of the scheme which provides for the issue of loans for which Ireland will be the security, said: "If the loans are issued at a premium Ireland will get the benefit; if at par, she will get pound for pound; if at a discount, she will have to make good the loan. If my voice could reach so far I should like to recall the attention of the Irish race across the sea to this fact. Their sentiments are in favor of a just, business-like settlement of the land question in Ireland. I have found strong expression of this sentiment on the part of the Irish race in America and elsewhere. A good opportunity will be offered to them when these loans are issued."

A well-known Irish American, speaking on the same subject, said that for years some of the United States have years some of the wealthiest Irish-Americans in the United States have declined to contribute to the Irish campaign funds, saying there was such a lack of harmony as to render unavailing any effort for Ireland's good. Now that all Ireland is in harmony these millionaires will have a chance to subscribe to a loan that cannot help but give the greatest possible benefit through geographical position with the but give the greatest possible benefit to Ireland. Besides, he added, the loan is not floated upon sentimental grounds, but upon a sound commercial basis. If Irish-Americans subscribe for the loan as they should it will go to a big premium and Ireland will reap the benefit.
